

April 2012

Reconciling Federal Circuit Choice of Law with Bay v. MercExchange's Abrogation of the Presumption of Irreparable Harm in Copyright Preliminary Injunctions

Erin V. Klewin

Follow this and additional works at: <https://ir.lawnet.fordham.edu/flr>

Part of the Law Commons

Recommended Citation

Erin V. Klewin, *Reconciling Federal Circuit Choice of Law with Bay v. MercExchange's Abrogation of the Presumption of Irreparable Harm in Copyright Preliminary Injunctions*, 80 Fordham L. Rev. 2113 (2012). Available at: <https://ir.lawnet.fordham.edu/flr/vol80/iss5/6>

This Note is brought to you for free and open access by FLASH: The Fordham Law Archive of Scholarship and History. It has been accepted for inclusion in Fordham Law Review by an authorized editor of FLASH: The Fordham Law Archive of Scholarship and History. For more information, please contact tmelnick@law.fordham.edu.

RECONCILING FEDERAL CIRCUIT CHOICE OF LAW WITH EBAY V. MERCEXCHANGE'S
ABROGATION OF THE PRESUMPTION OF IRREPARABLE HARM IN COPYRIGHT
PRELIMINARY INJUNCTIONS

*Erin V. Klewin

In 2006, the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in eBay, Inc. v. MercExchange, L.L.C. did more than establish the four-factor test that courts must utilize when determining whether to grant permanent injunctions for patent infringement. It also spawned a movement among lower courts to abandon the judicially created and sometimes-criticized practice of presuming the most important factor of the injunction analysis—irreparable harm—upon a showing of patent or copyright infringement. Over the past several decades, presuming such harm routinely permitted courts to automatically grant preliminary injunctions once a plaintiff proved a likelihood of success on the merits. This practice contrasted sharply with the historical nature of preliminary injunctions as “extraordinary” relief, which rested the burden of proof on the plaintiff.

In Jacobsen v. Katzer, the Federal Circuit became the first circuit to directly address eBay's potential application to preliminary injunctions in the copyright context. The Jacobsen court declined to invoke eBay's standards, and instead applied the Ninth Circuit's pre-eBay presumption of irreparable harm, as Federal Circuit precedent requires application of regional circuit law to copyright matters. This ruling contrasted with every circuit to subsequently confront the issue, including the Ninth Circuit, which effectively overruled the very presumption that the Jacobsen court utilized. This Note posits that the Jacobsen court erred in enforcing the presumption in a post-eBay landscape to begin with, as eBay indeed abrogated the presumption of irreparable harm as applied to copyright preliminary injunctions. Further, it urges the Federal Circuit to apply eBay's holding in future copyright cases where the regional circuit has not directly addressed the presumption's post-eBay vitality.

* J.D. Candidate, 2013, Fordham University School of Law; B.A., 2007, Boston College. I would like to thank my faculty advisor, Professor Ron Lazebnik, for his guidance and encouragement in writing this Note. I would also like to thank my family and friends for their unwavering encouragement, love, and support throughout this process, especially my parents, Janine and Greg Klewin, and everyone who reviewed drafts for me.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION.....	2115
I. FEDERAL CIRCUIT JURISDICTION AND AN OVERVIEW OF PATENT AND COPYRIGHT INJUNCTIONS PRIOR TO EBAY	2118
A. The Federal Circuit: Copyright Jurisdiction and Choice-of-Law Rules	2118
1. Jurisdiction over Pendent Copyright Claims	2119
2. Choice-of-Law Approach: Applying Regional Circuit Law to Copyright Claims	2121
B. Copyright and Patent Law: The Presumption of Irreparable Harm Before eBay	2123
1. What Is a Preliminary Injunction?	2124
2. Copyright Preliminary Injunctions Before eBay	2125
3. Patent Preliminary Injunctions Before eBay	2128
II. EBAY AND ITS PROGENY: CASTING DOUBT ON THE PRESUMPTION OF IRREPARABLE HARM.....	2129
A. eBay v. MercExchange	2130
B. eBay's Effect on the Presumption in the Patent Context	2132
C. eBay's Effect on the Presumption in the Copyright Context ..	2133
1. Circuit Courts Apply eBay to Permanent Injunctions.....	2134
2. District Courts Reach Conflicting Conclusions	2135
III. JACOBSEN V. KATZER AND THE SUBSEQUENT DEATH OF THE COPYRIGHT PRESUMPTION	2137
A. Jacobsen v. Katzer: Applying a Pre-eBay Standard to a Post-eBay Case	2137
B. Jacobsen's Aftermath	2139
1. Winter v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc.	2139
2. Circuits Abandon the Presumption for Copyright Preliminary Injunctions.....	2140
a. The Second Circuit	2141
b. The Ninth Circuit	2143
c. The Fourth Circuit	2145
3. The Federal Circuit Abandons the Presumption for Patent Injunctions.....	2146
IV. THE FEDERAL CIRCUIT SHOULD REJECT THE PRESUMPTION IN FUTURE COPYRIGHT CASES.....	2146
A. The Jacobsen Court's Error in Presuming Irreparable Harm After eBay	2147
1. Rationales for the Jacobsen Court's Failure to Apply eBay	2147
2. Why the Jacobsen Court Ultimately Erred in Presuming Harm After eBay	2149

B. The Federal Circuit Should Construe Unsettled Regional Law as Applying eBay to Copyright Preliminary Injunctions		2151
1. Harmonizing with Recent Case Law		2151
2. Advancing Public Policy.....		2152
CONCLUSION		2154

INTRODUCTION

The preliminary injunction has long been touted as an “extraordinary” measure that no person has an automatic right to receive.¹ To obtain preliminary injunctive relief, the moving party has the burden of proving four factors,² the most important being that irreparable harm will occur absent an injunction.³ However, over the past several decades, courts have routinely granted such extraordinary relief in the patent and copyright contexts by presuming irreparable harm once a plaintiff proved the first factor, a likelihood of success on the merits,⁴ rather than requiring the plaintiff to prove such harm. Although this sometimes-criticized⁵ judicial practice contrasted with the historically “extraordinary” nature of preliminary injunctions,⁶ courts justified copyright and patent’s special treatment by pointing to the nature of intangible property: the holder’s fundamental right to exclude made any infringement of this right not compensable by money damages, and thus automatically caused irreparable

1. See infra notes 87–89 and accompanying text.

2. These factors are: (1) the likelihood of success on the merits, (2) the likelihood of irreparable harm if injunctive relief is not granted, (3) the balance of the harms between plaintiff and defendant, and (4) whether an injunction is in the public interest. See Winter v. Natural Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 20 (citing Munaf v. Green, 553 U.S. 674, 679–80 (2008); Amoco Prod. Co. v. Vill. of Gambell, 480 U.S. 531, 542 (1987); Weinberger v. Romero-Barcelo, 456 U.S. 305, 311–12 (1982)).

3. See infra notes 82–83 and accompanying text; see also Weinberger, 456 U.S. at 312 (“The Court has repeatedly held that the basis for injunctive relief in the federal courts has always been irreparable injury and the inadequacy of legal remedies.”). Irreparable harm results when a party cannot be made whole by monetary damages. See infra notes 84–86 and accompanying text.

4. See infra notes 101–13, 114, 121–23 and accompanying text; see also Sole v. Wyner, 551 U.S. 74, 84 (2007) (“At the preliminary injunction stage, the court is called upon to assess the probability of the plaintiff’s ultimate success on the merits.”). In copyright and patent law, a likelihood of success on the merits, or prima facie infringement, is established by a clear showing of patent or copyright validity and infringement. See, e.g., Entm’t Research Grp., Inc. v. Genesis Creative Grp., Inc., 122 F.3d 1211, 1217 (9th Cir. 1997) (copyright); Polymer Techs., Inc. v. Bridwell, 103 F.3d 970, 973 (Fed. Cir. 1996) (patent).

5. See 6 WILLIAM F. PATRY, PATRY ON COPYRIGHT § 22:44 (2011) (describing the presumption as a “lamentable feature of copyright law” that has been “profoundly misunderstood and misapplied”).

6. See infra notes 87–89 and accompanying text. Compare Mazurek v. Armstrong, 520 U.S. 968, 972 (1997) (“[A] preliminary injunction is an extraordinary and drastic remedy, one that should not be granted unless the movant, by a clear showing, carries the burden of persuasion.”), with BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY 1304 (9th ed. 2009) (“A presumption shifts the burden of . . . persuasion to the opposing party, who can then attempt to overcome the presumption.”).

harm.⁷ The U.S. Supreme Court, however, recently cast such reasoning into serious doubt in eBay, Inc. v. MercExchange, L.L.C.,⁸ in which it reversed the Federal Circuit's practice of automatically granting permanent injunctions⁹ upon a finding of patent infringement.¹⁰ Rather, the eBay Court held that plaintiffs seeking such relief must instead prove each element of a similar four-factor test.¹¹

District courts disagreed over whether eBay's standard and its effect on the presumption of irreparable harm applied to the grant of preliminary injunctions in the copyright context.¹² In Jacobsen v. Katzer,¹³ the Federal Circuit had the opportunity to address this issue directly. Although three circuit courts had previously applied eBay's factors to permanent injunctions for copyright infringement,¹⁴ the Federal Circuit disregarded eBay and directed the district court to apply the Ninth Circuit's pre-eBay presumption of irreparable harm to its determination of whether to issue preliminary injunctive relief.¹⁵ While the Jacobsen court's professed application of regional circuit law to non-patent issues appeared to follow standard Federal Circuit choice-of-law precedent,¹⁶ this case was anything but standard: intervening Supreme Court precedent in eBay was irreconcilable with regional circuit law, and the Federal Circuit did not adequately address it.

After the Jacobsen ruling, the death of the presumption of irreparable harm in the copyright preliminary injunction context became increasingly apparent. First, the Supreme Court established in *Winter v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc.*¹⁷ that, in accordance with traditional equitable principles, plaintiffs must prove a "likelihood" of irreparable injury to obtain preliminary injunctive relief, declaring that a "possibility" of such harm was insufficient.¹⁸ Winter essentially clarified that the principles set forth in eBay also applied to preliminary injunctions, and

7. See infra notes 111–12 and accompanying text.

8. 547 U.S. 388 (2006).

9. Permanent injunctions are granted after a final hearing on the merits, and require the plaintiff to prove actual success, as opposed to a likelihood of success on the merits. See infra note 80 and accompanying text.

10. See eBay, 547 U.S. at 393–94.

11. Id. at 391 ("A plaintiff must demonstrate: (1) that it has suffered an irreparable injury; (2) that remedies available at law, such as monetary damages, are inadequate to compensate for that injury; (3) that, considering the balance of hardships between the plaintiff and defendant, a remedy in equity is warranted; and (4) that the public interest would not be disserved by a permanent injunction."); cf. supra note 2 and accompanying text (describing the traditional four-factor test for preliminary injunctions).

12. See infra Part II.C.2.

13. 535 F.3d 1373 (Fed. Cir. 2008).

14. See CoxCom, Inc. v. Chaffee, 536 F.3d 101, 112 (1st Cir. 2008); Peter Letterese & Assocs., Inc. v. World Inst. of Scientology Enters., Int'l, 533 F.3d 1287, 1323 (11th Cir. 2008); Christopher Phelps & Assoc., LLC v. Galloway, 492 F.3d 532, 543 (4th Cir. 2007).

15. See Jacobsen, 535 F.3d at 1378, 1383.

16. The Federal Circuit lacks subject matter jurisdiction over copyright claims, and established precedent requires application of the law of the regional circuit from which the copyright claim originates. See infra Part I.A.2.

17. 555 U.S. 7 (2008).

18. Id. at 22.

shifted the burden of persuasion squarely back on the plaintiff.¹⁹ Following Winter, three circuit courts not only applied eBay's four factors to preliminary injunctions in the copyright context, but also explicitly held that courts should not presume irreparable harm once a plaintiff has demonstrated prima facie infringement.²⁰ Ironically, one of these circuits was the Ninth Circuit, which effectively overruled the very presumption upon which Jacobsen had relied.²¹

Numerous scholars have posited that the presumption of irreparable harm does not survive eBay in the copyright preliminary injunction context.²² However, none have addressed how the Federal Circuit, with its unique choice-of-law rules applying regional circuit law to copyright matters,²³ should confront eBay's effect on the presumption in cases where the regional circuit has not directly spoken on the issue. This Note addresses whether the Federal Circuit in Jacobsen should have applied eBay to the copyright preliminary injunction motion at hand and rejected the presumption of irreparable harm. Despite uncertainty with respect to eBay's appropriate application at the time of Jacobsen,²⁴ the passage of time has significantly clarified eBay's abrogation of the presumption in the copyright preliminary injunction context.²⁵ The Federal Circuit should no longer apply the outdated presumption in the spirit of unwaveringly following regional circuit precedent when intervening Supreme Court law is clearly irreconcilable with such precedent.²⁶ Therefore, this Note urges the Federal Circuit to construe unsettled regional circuit law as rejecting the presumption of irreparable harm in the copyright preliminary injunction

19. See infra Part III.B.1.

20. See Bethesda Softworks, L.L.C. v. Interplay Entm't Corp., No. 11-1860, 2011 WL 5084587, at *2-3 (4th Cir. Oct. 26, 2011) (per curiam); Flexible Lifeline Sys., Inc., v. Precision Lift, Inc., 654 F.3d 989, 998 (9th Cir. 2011) (per curiam); Perfect 10, Inc. v. Google, Inc. (Perfect 10 III), 653 F.3d 976, 981 (9th Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 80 U.S.L.W. 3366 (U.S. Mar. 5, 2012) (No. 11-704); Salinger v. Colting, 607 F.3d 68, 82 (2d. Cir. 2010).

21. See Flexible Lifeline, 654 F.3d at 998; Perfect 10 III, 653 F.3d at 981; cf. Jacobsen, 535 F.3d at 1378.

22. See, e.g., 4 MELVILLE B. NIMMER & DAVID NIMMER, NIMMER ON COPYRIGHT, § 14.06[A][5][a][ii] (2011); 6 PATRY, supra note 5, § 22:44; Richard Dannay, Copyright Injunctions and Fair Use: Enter Ebay—Four-Factor Fatigue or Four-Factor Freedom?, 55 J. COPYRIGHT SOC'Y U.S.A. 449, 460 (2008); Pamela Samuelson & Krzysztof Bebenek, Why Plaintiffs Should Have to Prove Irreparable Harm in Copyright Preliminary Injunction Cases, 6 I/S: J.L. & POL'Y INFO. SOC'Y 67 (2010); John M. Newman, Note, Raising the Bar and the Public Interest: On Prior Restraints, "Traditional Contours," and Constitutionalizing Preliminary Injunctions in Copyright Law, 10 VA. SPORTS & ENT. L.J. 323, 359 (2011). Contra Aaron T. Dozeman, Note, Salinger and Ebay: When Equitable Considerations Undermine Exclusivity, 21 DEPAUL J. ART, TECH. & INTELL. PROP. L. 323, 324 (2011); Andrew F. Spillane, Comment, The Continuing Vitality of the Presumption of Irreparable Harm in Copyright Cases, 15 MARQ. INTELL. PROP. L. REV. 257, 259 (2011).

23. See infra Part I.A.1.

24. See infra Part II.C.1-2.

25. See infra Part III.B.1-2.

26. See 13 CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT ET AL., FEDERAL PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE § 3506 (3d ed. 2008) (explaining general circuit court practice that circuits are not bound by previous decisions when "an intervening decision by the Supreme Court . . . casts doubt on the prior ruling or perhaps if newly emergent authority, even though not directly controlling, offers a convincing reason for believing that the earlier panel would change its course").

context where the regional circuit has not directly addressed the presumption's vitality after eBay.

Part I of this Note provides a foundation on Federal Circuit jurisdiction, and describes patent and copyright preliminary injunctions. Part II analyzes eBay and its effect on patent and copyright injunctions leading up to the Federal Circuit's Jacobsen decision. Part III then focuses on Jacobsen and courts' subsequent rejection of the presumption of irreparable harm in a variety of contexts. Finally, Part IV contends that the Jacobsen court erroneously failed to apply the eBay standard to copyright preliminary injunctions, and offers guidance to the Federal Circuit on addressing the presumption in future copyright cases.

This Note concludes that, if faced with a copyright preliminary injunction case in a circuit that previously applied the presumption but that has not directly addressed its continuing vitality after eBay, the Federal Circuit should interpret such unsettled regional law by reasonably predicting that the circuit will reject the presumption as inconsistent with eBay. Such a holding aligns with relevant case law and advances important policy goals, including efficient utilization of court resources, avoidance of intercircuit conflict, and preservation of the extraordinary nature of preliminary injunctive relief.

I. FEDERAL CIRCUIT JURISDICTION AND AN OVERVIEW OF PATENT AND COPYRIGHT INJUNCTIONS PRIOR TO EBAY

Part I begins by discussing the unique subject matter jurisdiction of the Federal Circuit, which permits jurisdiction over copyright matters that are attached to patent claims, and a choice-of-law policy that applies regional circuit law to these pendent copyright matters. Next, it provides background on preliminary injunctive relief, focusing on its historical nature as an extraordinary remedy. It concludes by examining courts' widespread practice, in the copyright and patent injunction context, of presuming irreparable harm once a plaintiff showed a likelihood of success on the merits, a presumption that eBay called into doubt.

A. The Federal Circuit: Copyright Jurisdiction and Choice-of-Law Rules

In 1982, Congress enacted the Federal Courts Improvement Act²⁷ (FCIA), which created a thirteenth federal appellate court—the Federal Circuit. This court functions similarly to its twelve sister circuits, except for one important difference: its jurisdiction is based on subject matter rather than geography.²⁸ This includes sole jurisdiction over patent appeals,²⁹ but also exclusive jurisdiction over pendent matters attached to a

27. Pub. L. No. 97-164, 96 Stat. 25 (codified as amended in scattered sections of 28 U.S.C.).

28. S. REP. NO. 97-275, at 3 (1981), reprinted in 1982 U.S.C.C.A.N. 11, 13; H.R. REP. NO. 97-312, at 18 (1981).

29. See S. REP. NO. 97-275, at 7 (noting consolidation of the Court of Claim and Court of Customs and Patent Appeals); H.R. REP. NO. 97-312, at 20. The Federal Circuit also exercises exclusive appellate jurisdiction in several other areas that this Note will not patent claim.³⁰ While this permits the Federal Circuit to hear appeals of pendent copyright claims, such as the one in Jacobsen discussed later in this Note, the circuit has adopted a policy of applying regional circuit law to such matters. This section examines the jurisdiction and choice-of-law rules governing copyright matters in the Federal Circuit.

1. Jurisdiction over Pendent Copyright Claims

The FCIA designated the Federal Circuit as the sole court for patent appeals in a congressional effort to achieve uniformity in substantive patent law administration.³¹ Congress sought to unify patent appellate jurisdiction within one court in response to a perception of inefficient management of patent law in the courts.³² Congress's main purposes in allocating sole jurisdiction over patent issues to the Federal Circuit was thus to develop clearer patent doctrine and prevent forum shopping among the regional circuits.³³ Its patent jurisdiction includes appeals from the U.S. Patent & Trademark Office and district court cases arising under the patent laws, and comprises almost half of its caseload.³⁴ Its jurisdiction is not restricted to appeals of final decisions, but extends to interlocutory appeals from district courts.³⁵

The Federal Circuit has established exclusive jurisdiction over pendent matters that are attached to a patent claim, including copyright claims.³⁶ Through September 16, 2011, 28 U.S.C. § 1295(a)(1) stated that the Federal Circuit should exercise this jurisdiction where district court jurisdiction was based at least in part on patent or plant variety protection laws.³⁷ Thus, as address. See CRAIG ALLEN NARD & R. POLK WAGNER, PATENT LAW 31 (2008) (noting at least sixteen other areas, including government contracts and federal takings cases); Paul R. Gugliuzza, Rethinking Federal Circuit Jurisdiction, 100 GEO. L.J. (forthcoming 2012) (manuscript at 26–27), available at http://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=1945039.

30. See infra Part I.A.1.

31. ROBERT L. HARMON ET AL., PATENTS AND THE FEDERAL CIRCUIT 1294 (10th ed. 2011); accord S. REP. NO. 97-275, at 2; H.R. REP. NO. 97-312, at 20–23.

32. H.R. REP. NO. 97-312, at 22; accord NARD & WAGNER, supra note 29, at 33–34 (describing how varying treatment of patent cases by regional circuits led to forum shopping, and noting the Supreme Court's disinterest in managing patent cases due to large dockets and confusing technological issues).

33. S. REP. NO. 97-275, at 5; accord H.R. REP. NO. 97-312, at 20–22 (explaining that due to patent law's history of producing differing results in different courts, "some circuit courts are regarded as 'pro-patent' and other 'anti-patent,' and much time and money is expended in 'shopping' for a favorable venue").

34. See HARMON ET AL., supra note 31, at 1311–12; Gugliuzza, supra note 29 (manuscript at 26).

35. See 28 U.S.C. § 1292(c) (2006) (stating that the Federal Circuit shall have exclusive jurisdiction over "an appeal from an interlocutory order or decree described in subsection (a) or (b) of this section in any case over which the court would have jurisdiction of an appeal under section 1295").

36. HARMON ET AL., supra note 31, at 1308 (citing Panduit Corp. v. All States Plastic Mfg. Co., 744 F.2d 1564, 1572 n.9 (Fed. Cir. 1984) (per curiam)).

37. 28 U.S.C. § 1295(a)(1), amended by Leahy-Smith America Invents Act, Pub. L. No. 112-29, § 19(b), 125 Stat. 284, 331–32 (2011) (providing for Federal Circuit jurisdiction over appeals from a final decision of a district court if (1) "the jurisdiction of that court was the path of appeal was determined by the basis of jurisdiction in the district court, the Federal Circuit exercised jurisdiction over pendent copyright claims attached to a patent claim.³⁸ Indeed, this jurisdiction is not nullified even when the attached patent claims are dismissed with prejudice at the district court level; if the complaint contained patent infringement claims, the district court's jurisdiction arose in part under the patent laws and the Federal Circuit retains exclusive jurisdiction over all pendent claims.³⁹ As discussed in Part III, this permitted the Federal Circuit to exercise jurisdiction over the copyright infringement claim in Jacobsen because the original complaint also alleged the required patent issue—a claim for declaratory judgment of non-infringement of a patent.⁴⁰

The Federal Circuit first declared exclusive jurisdiction over an interlocutory appeal of a copyright preliminary injunction order in Atari, Inc. v. JS & A Group, Inc.,⁴¹ where the court identified several additional congressional intentions that informed Federal Circuit jurisdiction over a dispute of this manner.⁴² The court noted Congress's goal of avoiding bifurcated appeals,⁴³ forum shopping,⁴⁴ specialization of the court,⁴⁵ and the Federal Circuit's appropriation of elements of law not specifically assigned to it.⁴⁶ While Congress amended § 1295(a)(1) in 2011 to confer exclusive Federal Circuit jurisdiction over appeals of a district court final decision “in any civil action arising under . . . any Act of Congress relating based, in whole or in part, on section 1338 of this title” and (2) the case was not “a case involving a claim arising under any Act of Congress relating to copyrights, exclusive rights in mask works, or trademarks and no other claims under section 1338(a)”. Section 1338(a) states that “district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action arising under any Act of Congress relating to patents, plant variety protection, copyrights and trademarks.” Id. § 1338(a).

38. See Atari, Inc. v. JS & A Grp., 747 F.2d 1422, 1429–30 (Fed. Cir. 1984) (discussing the subject matter jurisdiction of the Federal Court over pendent copyright claims), overruled in part by Nobelpharma AB v. Implant Innovations, Inc., 141 F.3d 1059 (Fed. Cir. 1998); accord Panduit, 744 F.2d at 1572 n.9.

39. Chamberlain Grp., Inc. v. Skylink Techs., Inc., 381 F.3d 1178, 1189–90 (Fed. Cir. 2004); accord Zenith Elecs. Corp. v. Exzec, Inc., 182 F.3d 1340, 1346 (Fed. Cir. 1999); HARMON ET AL., supra note 31, at 1308–09 (discussing in detail the Federal Circuit's exclusive jurisdiction to review pendent matters, including copyright, “as long as the case involves a bona fide patent claim”).

40. See infra notes 196–97 and accompanying text.

41. 747 F.2d 1422.

42. See id. at 1434–35.

43. See id. at 1435–36 (“Congress specifically rejected [the] suggestion that this court should have only ‘issue’ jurisdiction and that appeals involving patent and non-patent issues should be bifurcated. . . . Congress’ statement that ‘cases’ will be within the jurisdiction of this court, and its statement that [Federal Circuit] jurisdiction should be contrasted with the bifurcated appellate jurisdiction set forth in Coastal States Marketing . . . reflects the intent of Congress to avoid bifurcation of appeals to this court.” (construing H.R. REP. NO. 97-275, at 41 (1981))).

44. See id. at 1437–38.

45. See id. at 1436–37 (“‘The proposed new court is not a specialized court.’” (quoting H.R. REP. NO. 97-275, at 19)).

46. See id. at 1438 (describing how Congress's passage of the FCIA despite concerns that the Federal Circuit might appropriate non-patent issues attached to patent claims was proof of its faith that the Federal Circuit would not exceed its mandate to rule on substantive patent law).

to patents,”⁴⁷ it is likely that the amended statute’s language does not change the Federal Circuit’s jurisdiction to hear non-patent issues so long as they are attached to a patent claim.⁴⁸

2. Choice-of-Law Approach: Applying Regional Circuit Law to Copyright Claims

While the Federal Circuit exercised clear jurisdiction over pendent copyright claims attached to a patent claim, it recognized that a question remained as to what law should apply to such fields not within the court’s exclusive subject matter jurisdiction.⁴⁹ In Panduit Corp. v. All States Plastic Manufacturing Co.,⁵⁰ the Federal Circuit first articulated its policy of applying regional circuit law to pendent non-patent issues,⁵¹ including copyright claims.⁵² This choice-of-law approach led the Federal Circuit to apply regional circuit law specifically to the issuance of preliminary injunctions in copyright cases,⁵³ as will be discussed in connection with the Jacobsen decision.⁵⁴

Although not statutorily required to do so, the Federal Circuit has applied these choice-of-law rules in order “to avoid exacerbating the problem of

47. Leahy-Smith America Invents Act, Pub. L. No. 112-29, § 19(b), 125 Stat. 284 (2011) (to be codified at 28 U.S.C. § 1295(a)(1)) (providing Federal Circuit jurisdiction “of an appeal from a final decision of a district court of the United States . . . in any civil action arising under, or in any civil action in which a party has asserted a compulsory counterclaim arising under, any Act of Congress relating to patents or plant variety protection”).

48. Compare id., with 28 U.S.C § 1295(a)(1) (2006) (conferring Federal Circuit jurisdiction over appeals of civil actions in which district court jurisdiction was based at least in part on patent or plant variety protection laws). It is unclear if the removal of the language “in whole or in part” has any significance on whether the Federal Circuit can hear non-patent issues, as, for example, an action for copyright and patent infringement still arises in part under the patent laws. Because this amendment is new and has not yet been clarified by the courts, this Note will assume that the Federal Circuit can still hear non-patent issues over which the district courts have original jurisdiction, so long as the action arose in part under patent law. This reading is in line with historical Federal Circuit precedent. See, e.g., Panduit Corp. v. All States Plastic Mfg. Co., 744 F.2d 1564, 1572 n.9 (Fed. Cir. 1984) (per curiam). Further, it seems the amendment was enacted to permit parties to bring compulsory counterclaims arising under patent law in the Federal Circuit as a response to the Supreme Court’s decision in Holmes Group v. Vornado Air Circulation Systems, Inc. 535 U.S. 826 (2002) (holding that the Federal Circuit did not have appellate jurisdiction over a case in which the complaint did not allege a claim arising under federal patent law, but the answer contained a patent-law counterclaim).

49. See Bandag, Inc. v. Al Bolser’s Tire Stores, Inc., 750 F.2d 903, 909 (Fed. Cir. 1984) (“As to nonpatent matters . . . a significant choice of law question inherently arises.”).

50. 744 F.2d 1564.

51. Id. at 1574–75; accord Atari Games Corp. v. Nintendo of Am., Inc., 897 F.2d 1572, 1575 (Fed. Cir. 1990) (“When the questions on appeal involve law and precedent on subjects not exclusively assigned to the Federal Circuit, the court applies the law which would be applied by the regional circuit.”); Bandag, 750 F.2d at 909.

52. See, e.g., Amini Innovation Corp. v. Anthony Cal., Inc. 439 F.3d 1365, 1368 (Fed. Cir. 2006).

53. See, e.g., Chamberlain Grp., Inc. v. Skylink Techs., Inc., 381 F.3d 1178, 1191 (Fed. Cir. 2004); Atari, 897 F.2d at 1575.

54. See supra note 198 and accompanying text.

intercircuit conflicts in non-patent areas”⁵⁵ and to save district courts from the confusion of “serving two masters.”⁵⁶ It also sought to minimize parties’ incentives to forum shop on non-patent claims,⁵⁷ in accordance with congressional intent.⁵⁸ Because Congress never imposed any requirement upon the Federal Circuit to clear up intercircuit conflicts with respect to non-patent matters, the court found this reasoning appropriate.⁵⁹ Additionally, in Atari, the court held that applying regional circuit law to non-patent matters allowed it to satisfy congressional intention to avoid Federal Circuit appropriation of legal fields not exclusively assigned to it.⁶⁰ However, the court recognized that regional circuit law may not always be clear, and held that the Federal Circuit should “decide non-patent matters in light of the problems faced by the district court . . . including the law there applicable” and “to the extent it can be discerned.”⁶¹ Further, where a regional circuit has not directly spoken on a particular issue, the Federal Circuit held that it must “reasonably predict how that court would decide the issue” in light of issues such as the circuit’s district court decisions and public policy.⁶²

Despite this limiting holding, the Federal Circuit has expanded the realm to which it applies its own law beyond purely substantive patent issues. In Midwest Industries, Inc. v. Karavan Trailers, Inc.,⁶³ the court held en banc⁶⁴ that it would no longer apply regional circuit law to issues involving the interplay between patent and non-patent law.⁶⁵ The court confirmed

55. Bandag, 750 F.2d at 909; accord Panduit, 744 F.2d at 1574 (“[W]e must resolve this choice of law question by considering the general policy of minimizing confusion and conflicts in the federal judicial system.”).

56. See Atari, Inc. v. JS & A Grp., Inc., 747 F.2d 1422, 1439 (Fed. Cir. 1984) (“It would be at best unfair to hold in this case that the district court, at risk of error, should have ‘served two masters’, or that it should have looked, Janus-like, in two directions in its conduct of that judicial process.”), overruled in part by Nobelpharma AB v. Implant Innovations, Inc., 141 F.3d 1059 (Fed. Cir. 1998).

57. Midwest Indus., Inc., v. Karavan Trailers, Inc., 175 F.3d 1356, 1359 (Fed. Cir. 1999) (en banc); accord Atari, 747 F.2d at 1439.

58. See S. REP. NO. 97-275, at 19–20 (1981), reprinted in 1982 U.S.C.C.A.N. 11, 29–30 (“[The Federal Circuit’s exclusive jurisdiction over patent claims] is intended to alleviate the serious problems of forums [sic] shopping among the regional courts of appeals on patent claims It is not intended to create forum shopping opportunities between the Federal Circuit and the regional courts of appeals on other claims.”).

59. Bandag, 750 F.2d at 909 (“No mandate to unify intercircuit conflicts regarding [nonpatent] matters was given to this court by Congress in its passage of our enabling legislation . . .”).

60. Atari, 747 F.2d at 1438.

61. Id. at 1439 (quoting Bandag, 750 F.2d at 909); see id. at 1440 (“[T]he task remains a challenge, for the path to the established law of the involved circuit may or may not be easily discernible and clearly marked.”).

62. TechSearch, L.L.C. v. Intel Corp., 286 F.3d 1360, 1378 (Fed. Cir. 2002); Panduit Corp. v. All States Plastic Mfg. Co., 744 F.2d 1564, 1575–76 (Fed. Cir. 1984) (per curiam).

63. 175 F.3d 1356 (Fed. Cir. 1999) (en banc).

64. To overrule precedent, the Federal Circuit must rule en banc. See George E. Warren Corp. v. United States, 341 F.3d 1348, 1351–52 (Fed. Cir. 2003).

65. Midwest, 175 F.3d at 1358–60 (“[We] conclude that we should abandon our practice of applying regional circuit law in resolving questions involving the relationship between that Federal Circuit law extends beyond substantive patent law to non-patent issues that are “affected by the special circumstances of the patent law setting in which those issues arise.”⁶⁶ Applying its own law to such issues, it asserted, would help fulfill its obligation of promoting uniformity within patent law, prevent inconsistent lines of authority, and provide other courts with the benefit of Federal Circuit patent law analysis.⁶⁷ The court thus overruled previous decisions by the Federal Circuit⁶⁸ in which it had applied regional circuit law to patent-related issues that were not substantive patent law.⁶⁹ The circuit now routinely applies its own law to procedural issues pertaining to patent law,⁷⁰ including questions of personal jurisdiction in patent law cases,⁷¹ non-mutual issue preclusion in patent cases,⁷² and whether a plaintiff has the right to both permanent⁷³ and preliminary injunctive relief for patent infringement.⁷⁴ As the Federal Circuit began to apply its own law to the grant of injunctive relief for patent infringement, it adopted standards from its sister circuits.⁷⁵ Indeed, it almost always granted such relief upon a finding of infringement, borrowing a theory from copyright known as the presumption of irreparable harm.⁷⁶

B. Copyright and Patent Law: The Presumption of Irreparable Harm Before eBay

This section outlines circuit courts’ legal standards for granting copyright and patent injunctions before eBay, including the common judicial practice of presuming irreparable harm once a plaintiff proved a likelihood of success on the merits. This practice, however, contrasted sharply with the traditional view of the preliminary injunction as an extraordinary remedy that no party had an automatic right to receive.⁷⁷ patent law and other federal and state law rights. Henceforth, we will apply our own law to such questions.”).

66. Id. at 1359–60 (holding that Federal Circuit law governs procedural issues not themselves of substantive patent law if “the issue pertains to patent law, if it bears an essential relationship to matters committed to our exclusive control by statute, or if it clearly implicates the jurisprudential responsibilities of this court in a field within its exclusive jurisdiction” (internal quotation marks and citations omitted)).

67. See id. at 1360–61.

68. See, e.g., Cable Elec. Prods., Inc. v. Genmark, Inc., 770 F.2d 1015, 1032 (Fed. Cir. 1985) (holding that regional circuit law applies in determining whether patent law preempts particular state law claims), overruled by Midwest, 175 F.3d 1356.

69. Midwest, 175 F.3d at 1359.

70. See, e.g., Research Corp. Techs. v. Microsoft Corp., 536 F.3d 1247, 1255 (Fed. Cir. 2008).

71. See Hildenbrand v. Steck Mfg. Co., 279 F.3d 1351, 1354 (Fed. Cir. 2002).

72. See Abbott Labs. v. Andrx Pharm., Inc., 473 F.3d 1196, 1202–03 (Fed. Cir. 2007).

73. See, e.g., Voda v. Cordis Corp., 536 F.3d 1311, 1319 (Fed. Cir. 2008).

74. See, e.g., Abbott Labs. v. Sandoz, Inc., 544 F.3d 1341, 1368 (Fed. Cir. 2008); Hybritech Inc. v. Abbott Labs., 849 F.2d 1446, 1451 n.12 (Fed. Cir. 1988).

75. See Sandoz, 544 F.3d at 1368 (collecting cases to show how “Federal Circuit precedent [regarding issuing preliminary injunctions] developed to match the rest of the nation”).

76. See NARD & WAGNER, supra note 29, at 205–06.

77. See infra notes 87–88 and accompanying text.

1. What Is a Preliminary Injunction?

An injunction is a court order directing a party to perform or prevent a specific action.⁷⁸ While permanent injunctions are granted at the end of a trial, temporary or “preliminary” injunctions are “issued before or during trial to prevent an irreparable injury from occurring before the court has a chance to decide the case.”⁷⁹ The Supreme Court has emphasized that both forms of injunctive relief require similar analyses, except that the plaintiff requesting preliminary relief must also prove a likelihood of success on the merits of her claim.⁸⁰ The Court recently confirmed the traditional four-factor test that courts must apply in determining whether to issue a preliminary injunction: (1) the likelihood of success on the merits, (2) the likelihood of irreparable harm if injunctive relief is not granted, (3) the balance of the harms between plaintiff and defendant, and (4) whether an injunction is in the public interest.⁸¹ The second factor, proof of irreparable harm, is the most important element of any grant of preliminary injunctive relief,⁸² and is often considered a prerequisite to such a grant.⁸³ The movant has the burden of proving irreparable harm,⁸⁴ which results when the movant cannot be adequately compensated by monetary relief⁸⁵ and courts find it difficult to calculate losses.⁸⁶

From its origins in the courts of equity, preliminary injunctions have long been viewed as providing relief in extraordinary cases,⁸⁷ and the Supreme

78. See BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY, supra note 6, at 855.

79. Id.

80. See Winter v. Natural Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 32–33 (2008); Amoco Prod. Co. v. Vill. of Gambell, 480 U.S. 531, 546 n.12 (1987) (“The standard for a preliminary injunction is essentially the same as for a permanent injunction with the exception that the plaintiff must show a likelihood of success on the merits rather than actual success.”). Permanent injunctions are granted after the plaintiff has already prevailed on the merits of its claim. See 42 AM. JUR. 2D Injunctions § 11 (2010).

81. Winter, 555 U.S. at 20 (citing Munaf v. Green, 553 U.S. 674, 679–80 (2008); Amoco, 480 U.S. at 542; Weinberger v. Romero-Barcelo, 456 U.S. 305, 311–12 (1982)); see also KIRSTIN STOLL-DEBELL ET AL., INJUNCTIVE RELIEF: TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDERS & PRELIMINARY INJUNCTIONS 20 (2009) (noting the test’s origins in equity).

82. See 6 PATRY, supra note 5, § 22:33 n.1 (collecting numerous cases in support).

83. See Weinberger v. Romero-Barcelo, 456 U.S. 305, 312 (1987) (The Court has repeatedly held that the basis for injunctive relief in the federal courts has always been irreparable injury and the inadequacy of legal remedies.”); see also 6 PATRY, supra note 5, § 22:33 (“The absence of an adequate remedy at law is a precondition to equitable relief.” (quoting Roland Mach. Co. v. Dresser Indus., Inc., 749 F.2d 380, 386 (7th Cir. 1984))); accord Freedom Holdings, Inc. v. Spitzer, 408 F.3d 112, 114 (2d Cir. 2005) (stating that irreparable harm is the “single most important prerequisite for issuance of a preliminary injunction”).

84. 6 PATRY, supra note 5, § 22:35.

85. Id. § 22:33.

86. Id. § 22:34.

87. See 4 NIMMER, supra note 22, § 14.06[A][1][b] n.14 (collecting cases referring to preliminary injunctive relief as “extraordinary”); 6 PATRY, supra note 5, § 22.10 (collecting cases to describe how the drastic remedy of injunctive relief should be the exception, and not the rule); STOLL-DEBELL ET AL., supra note 81, at 4–5 (describing the narrow limitations originally put on injunctions in accordance with English law, and U.S. congressional efforts to limit the use of injunctive relief to extraordinary cases).

Court has continuously underscored this notion.⁸⁸ The importance of this remedy cannot be overstated; as an interlocutory order granting preliminary injunctive relief frequently puts an end to litigation, it is often the most important decision in a case.⁸⁹ Further, as this remedy is granted when the factual record is often incomplete,⁹⁰ commentators have noted that such relief can potentially lead to erroneous rulings and should not be taken lightly.⁹¹

Nevertheless, courts are given wide discretion in crafting preliminary injunctive relief, and a district court's grant or denial will remain undisturbed unless there was a clear abuse of discretion.⁹² Less than scrupulous adherence to traditional equitable principles, including the tendency of courts to presume irreparable harm upon a showing of likelihood of success of a copyright or patent infringement claim, has made such "extraordinary" relief much more obtainable in intellectual property cases over the past several decades.⁹³

2. Copyright Preliminary Injunctions Before eBay

Copyright law owes its origins to the Intellectual Property Clause of the Constitution, which grants to Congress the power "[t]o promote the

88. See, e.g., Mazurek v. Armstrong, 520 U.S. 968, 972 (1997) ("It frequently is observed that a preliminary injunction is an extraordinary and drastic remedy, one that should not be granted unless the movant, by a clear showing, carries the burden of persuasion." (quoting 11A CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT ET AL., FEDERAL PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE § 2948 (2d ed. 1995))); Amoco Prod. Co. v. Vill. of Gambell, 480 U.S. 531, 542 (1987) ("[A]n injunction is an equitable remedy that does not issue as of course."); Weinberger, 456 U.S. 305, 311–12 (1982) (collecting cases); City of Harrisonville v. W.S. Dickey Clay Mfg. Co., 289 U.S. 334, 337–38 (1933) ("[A]n injunction is not a remedy which issues as of course."); Cavanaugh v. Looney, 248 U.S. 453, 456 (1919) ("[An injunction] should be exercised only where intervention is essential in order effectually to protect property rights against injuries otherwise irremediable."); Consol. Canal Co. v. Mesa Canal Co., 177 U.S. 296, 302 (1900) ("[I]t is familiar law that injunction will not issue to enforce a right that is doubtful, or to restrain an act the injurious consequences of which are merely trifling.").

89. 6 PATRY, supra note 5, § 22:7.

90. See Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios, Inc. v. Grokster, Ltd., 518 F. Supp. 2d 1197, 1212 (C.D. Cal. 2007) ("Preliminary injunctions are typically requested when a lawsuit's factual development is limited."); 6 PATRY, supra note 5, § 22:7; Newman, supra note 22, at 325.

91. See 4 NIMMER, supra note 22, § 14.06[A][6][c]; 6 PATRY, supra note 5, § 22:7; Samuelson & Bebenek, supra note 22, at 79; Newman, supra note 22, at 354–55 (citing Mark A. Lemley & Eugene Volokh, Freedom of Speech and Injunctions in Intellectual Property Cases, 48 DUKE L.J. 147, 150 (1998)). But cf. Lennon v. Premise Media Corp., 556 F. Supp. 2d 310, 319 n.1 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) ("A presumption temporarily removing the need to prove irreparable harm may serve the ends of equity at this early stage of the litigation even if it would be inappropriate where the record is complete.").

92. 6 PATRY, supra note 5, § 22:8. Such abuse occurs when a district court bases its decision on an erroneous legal standard or clearly erroneous facts. See, e.g., Am. Trucking Ass'n v. Los Angeles, 559 F.3d 1046, 1052 (9th Cir. 2009).

93. 6 PATRY, supra note 5, § 22:13; STOLL-DEBELL ET AL., supra note 81, at 10; accord 4 NIMMER, supra note 22, § 14.06[A][1][b]; see also Lemley & Volokh, supra note 91, at 150 ("In copyright cases . . . preliminary injunctions are granted pretty much as a matter of course.").

Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries.”⁹⁴ Congress enacted the Copyright Act with the utilitarian purpose of incentivizing the production of new works by granting authors monopolies on their original works for a limited time.⁹⁵ The Act grants copyright holders the exclusive rights to reproduce, adapt, distribute, perform, and display their works;⁹⁶ the holder’s right to exclude others from using the work has been deemed “fundamental and beyond dispute.”⁹⁷

The current Copyright Act of 1976 authorizes a court to grant preliminary and permanent injunctions to prevent infringement “on such terms as it may deem reasonable.”⁹⁸ Courts have held that the main purpose of preliminary injunctive relief in the copyright context is to maintain the status quo until the court can reach a final adjudication on the merits of the claim.⁹⁹ What constitutes irreparable harm for copyright infringement is vague at best, but courts have found factors such as the fleeting market life of a work, imminent financial ruin, and loss of reputation to satisfy this opaque requirement.¹⁰⁰

Prior to eBay, most circuits utilized the traditional four-factor test with minor variations.¹⁰¹ The Second and Ninth Circuits differed from their sister circuits in adopting similar two-part tests.¹⁰² The Ninth Circuit’s test, in particular, represented points on a continuum where the required

94. U.S. CONST. art. I, § 8, cl. 8.

95. See JULIE E. COHEN ET AL., COPYRIGHT IN A GLOBAL INFORMATION ECONOMY 4, 7 (3d ed. 2010).

96. 17 U.S.C. § 106 (2006).

97. Authors Guild v. Google Inc., 770 F. Supp. 2d 666, 681 (S.D.N.Y. 2011) (citing Fox Film Corp. v. Doyal, 286 U.S. 123, 127 (1932)).

98. 17 U.S.C. § 502(a) (2006) (“Any court having jurisdiction . . . may . . . grant temporary and final injunctions on such terms as it may deem reasonable to prevent or restrain infringement of a copyright.”).

99. See, e.g., 4 NIMMER, supra note 22, § 14.06[A][1][a] (quoting Warner Bros. v. Dae Rim Trading, Inc., 877 F.2d 1120, 1125 (2d Cir. 1989)); accord 6 PATRY, supra note 5, § 22:10 n.5 (collecting cases). But see id. § 22:10 (explaining that preservation of the status quo is “at best aspirational,” and courts should instead “seek . . . to preserve their ability to render a meaningful judgment at trial”).

100. See 6 PATRY, supra note 5, § 22:37–41.

101. See id. § 22:21 & n.2 (collecting cases from each circuit); STOLL-DEBELL ET AL., supra note 81, at 22–30 (citing each circuit’s test for preliminary injunctions).

102. Compare MyWebGrocer, LLC v. Hometown Info, Inc., 375 F.3d 190, 192 (2d Cir. 2004) (“A party . . . must demonstrate (1) irreparable harm in the absence of the injunction and (2) either (a) a likelihood of success on the merits or (b) sufficiently serious questions going to the merits to make them a fair ground for litigation and a balance of hardships tipping decidedly in the movant’s favor.”), with LGS Architects, Inc. v. Concordia Homes of Nev., 434 F.3d 1150, 1155 (9th Cir. 2006) (“[R]elief is available to a party who demonstrates either: (1) a combination of probable success on the merits and the possibility of irreparable harm; or (2) that serious questions are raised and the balance of hardships tips in its favor.”). Both tests eliminate the public interest factor and balance the remaining three elements, with a stronger showing of probable success on the merits reducing the required showing of irreparable harm or balancing of the hardships. Lemley & Volokh, supra note 91, at 159 n.49.

irreparable harm increased as the likelihood of success decreased.¹⁰³ One commentator coined the two-part formulation the “predominant test” for issuance of a copyright preliminary injunction, despite its usage in only two circuits.¹⁰⁴ This is unsurprising, given that the Second and Ninth Circuits are considered leaders in the copyright field, as they house the entertainment and publishing capitals of the country,¹⁰⁵ and account for nearly half of all copyright infringement appeals.¹⁰⁶ The majority of the circuits granted copyright preliminary injunctions without analyzing all the factors; in fact, once a likelihood of success was established, courts normally presumed irreparable harm.¹⁰⁷

The copyright presumption of irreparable harm, which is usually rebuttable by the defendant,¹⁰⁸ first surfaced in a 1968 Second Circuit decision¹⁰⁹ and was adopted gradually by other circuits over the next two decades.¹¹⁰ Courts justified this presumption by pointing to the intangible nature of copyright and the inherent difficulty of calculating monetary

103. LGS Architects, 434 F.3d at 1155 (quoting A&M Records, Inc. v. Napster, Inc., 239 F.3d 1004, 1013 (9th Cir. 2001)).

104. See 4 NIMMER, supra note 22, § 14.06[A][2][a].

105. See COHEN ET AL., supra note 95, at 309; Lemley & Volokh, supra note 91, at 161.

106. Newman, supra note 22, at 356 n.198 (describing a recent Westlaw search revealing that nearly forty-six percent of copyright infringement cases were brought in the Second and Ninth Circuits, with the remainder being initiated in the other eleven circuits).

107. See, e.g., LGS Architects, Inc. v. Concordia Homes of Nev., 434 F.3d 1150, 1155–56 (9th Cir. 2006); MyWebGrocer, LLC v. Hometown Info, Inc., 375 F.3d 190, 192–93 (2d Cir. 2004); Video Pipeline, Inc. v. Buena Vista Home Entm’t, Inc., 342 F.3d 191, 206 (3d Cir. 2003); Taylor Corp. v. Four Seasons Greetings, LLC, 315 F.3d 1039, 1041–42 (8th Cir. 2003); Country Kids ‘N City Slicks, Inc. v. Sheen, 77 F.3d 1280, 1288–89 (10th Cir. 1996); Serv. & Training, Inc. v. Data Gen. Corp., 963 F.2d 680, 690 (4th Cir. 1992); Concrete Mach. Co. v. Classic Lawn Ornaments, Inc., 843 F.2d 600, 611–12 (1st Cir. 1988); Forry, Inc. v. Neundorfer, Inc., 837 F.2d 259, 267 (6th Cir. 1988); Atari, Inc. v. N. Am. Philips Consumer Elecs. Corp., 672 F.2d 607, 620 (7th Cir. 1982); see also 4 NIMMER, supra note 22, § 14.06[A][2][b] & n.51 (collecting cases); 6 PATRY, supra note 5, § 22:44 & nn.5–6 (collecting cases). The District of Columbia Circuit has never approved the presumption, but several trial courts within the circuit have applied it. See, e.g., Health Ins. Ass’n of Am. v. Novelli, 211 F. Supp. 2d 23, 28 (D.D.C. 2002). In contrast, the Fifth Circuit has expressly refused to presume irreparable harm upon prima facie infringement, and has required plaintiffs to prove each element of the test. See, e.g., Plains Cotton Coop. Ass’n of Lubbock, Tex. v. Goodpasture Computer Serv., Inc., 807 F.2d 1256, 1261 (5th Cir. 1987). For a thorough history of copyright preliminary injunctions in the United States, see also Lemley & Volokh, supra note 91, at 154–65.

108. See, e.g., Suntrust Bank v. Houghton Mifflin Co., 268 F.3d 1257, 1265 (11th Cir. 2001) (presumption to be rebutted by a fair use defense); Cadence Design Sys., Inc. v. Avant! Corp., 125 F.3d 824, 829 (9th Cir. 1997) (“[T]he presumption is rebutted where the plaintiff has not been harmed, where any harm is de minimis, or where the defendant acted with innocent intent, relying on lack of copyright notice.”); Richard Feiner & Co. v. Turner Entm’t Co., 98 F.3d 33, 35 (2d Cir. 1996) (presumption rebutted by plaintiff’s undue delay in bringing the action). But see Cadence, 125 F.3d at 827 (9th Cir. 1997) (holding that the adequacy of monetary damages can never rebut the presumption).

109. Am. Metro. Enters. of N.Y., Inc. v. Warner Bros. Records, Inc., 389 F.2d 903, 905 (2d Cir. 1968) (“A copyright holder in the ordinary case may be presumed to suffer irreparable harm when his right to the exclusive use of the copyrighted material is invaded.”).

110. See 6 PATRY, supra note 5, § 22:49 (noting when the presumption was adopted by each court).

damages in copyright cases.¹¹¹ Due to an infringement's invasion of the copyright holder's right to exclude, the belief was that combating infringement required injunctive relief to prevent destruction of the property's value.¹¹² The practice of presuming harm often collapsed the four-factor test to one factor: whether the plaintiff demonstrated a likelihood of success on the merits.¹¹³ In the Second and Ninth Circuits, presuming irreparable harm essentially reduced each two-part test to one factor as well, resulting in the issuance of preliminary injunctions in the leading copyright circuits upon a mere showing of prima facie infringement.¹¹⁴

3. Patent Preliminary Injunctions Before eBay

Copyright law is not the only field that has adopted the presumption of irreparable harm in the injunction context. The Federal Circuit also adopted this presumption with respect to patent law, which serves a similar utilitarian function to that of copyright: it seeks to stimulate innovation among society by granting temporary monopolies to inventors.¹¹⁵ As with copyright, patent owners are granted a property right in their discoveries by Congress under its constitutionally granted power in the Intellectual Property Clause.¹¹⁶ The Patent Act authorizes patent holders the exclusive rights to make, use, offer to sell, or sell their inventions.¹¹⁷ The Act states that a court "may" grant an injunction "on such terms as the court deems reasonable."¹¹⁸

111. Id. § 22:50; see, e.g., Country Kids, 77 F.3d at 1288 ("[T]he financial impact of copyright infringement is hard to measure and often involves intangible qualities."); Concrete Mach. Co., 843 F.2d at 611 (explaining how the commercial value of this intangible interest is "often fleeting" and "may be lost by the time litigation on the claim is complete."). But cf. 6 PATRY, supra note 5, § 22:50 (opining that this rationale "merely stat[es] a conclusion for the presumption," and identifies a lack of reasoning over why copyright's intangible nature makes calculations of damages difficult).

112. See, e.g., Fashion Victim Ltd. v. Sunrise Turquoise, Inc., 785 F. Supp. 1302, 1307 (N.D. Ill. 1992).

113. 4 NIMMER, supra note 22, § 14.06[A][2][c] (noting that in many cases, courts failed to invoke the balancing of the harms and public interest factors, making a likelihood of success on the merits the determinative factor); accord Lemley & Volokh, supra note 91, at 158–64. Analysis of the balancing of the harms and public interest factors are beyond the scope of this Note.

114. See 4 NIMMER, supra note 22, § 14.06[A][2][c].

115. See Kewanee Oil Co. v. Bicron Corp., 416 U.S. 470, 480 (1974). Compare id., with supra text accompanying notes 95–97 (discussing the similar goals of copyright law).

116. U.S. CONST. art. I, § 8, cl. 8; see Roper Corp. v. Litton Sys., Inc., 757 F.2d 1266, 1272 (Fed. Cir. 1985); see also supra note 94 and accompanying text (noting copyright's origins in the Intellectual Property Clause).

117. See 35 U.S.C. § 271 (2006).

118. Compare id. § 283 ("The several courts . . . may grant injunctions in accordance with the principles of equity to prevent the violation of any right secured by patent, on such terms as the court deems reasonable." (emphasis added)), with 17 U.S.C. § 502(a) (2006) ("Any court having jurisdiction . . . may . . . grant temporary and final injunctions on such terms as it may deem reasonable to prevent or restrain infringement of a copyright." (emphasis added)).

In accordance with the majority of its sister circuits,¹¹⁹ the Federal Circuit has applied the traditional four-part test in determining whether to grant a preliminary injunction for patent infringement.¹²⁰ The Federal Circuit first “lowered the bar”¹²¹ for granting preliminary injunctions in patent cases in *Smith International Inc. v. Hughes Tool Co.*¹²² by expressly holding that a likelihood of success on the merits raised a presumption of irreparable harm.¹²³ Similar to the reasoning courts employed to justify the presumption in copyright law,¹²⁴ the Federal Circuit based this policy on the patent holder’s right to exclude.¹²⁵ Indeed, the Smith court acknowledged that it adopted this presumption from copyright doctrine,¹²⁶ and the circuit has specifically analogized the property rights of copyright law to patent law in support of such application.¹²⁷ The Federal Circuit also implicitly applied this presumption to permanent injunctions, and routinely granted the remedy upon a finding of infringement,¹²⁸ until the seminal case eBay v. MercExchange.

II. EBAY AND ITS PROGENY: CASTING DOUBT ON THE PRESUMPTION OF IRREPARABLE HARM

Part II first introduces the eBay decision, which ushered in a “sea change”¹²⁹ by holding that plaintiffs are not automatically entitled to permanent injunctions following a holding of patent infringement. Without express guidance from the Court regarding whether eBay explicitly abolished the presumption of irreparable harm—in addition to its broad language analogizing patent to copyright law—division emerged among lower courts prior to Jacobsen with respect to eBay’s extension to copyright

119. See Abbott Labs. v. Sandoz, Inc., 544 F.3d 1341, 1368 (Fed. Cir. 2008) (“Federal Circuit precedent developed to match the rest of the nation.”).

120. See, e.g., Hybritech Inc. v. Abbott Labs., 849 F.2d 1446, 1451 (Fed. Cir. 1988) (“[T]o obtain a preliminary injunction . . . a party must establish a right thereto in light of four factors: (1) reasonable likelihood of success on the merits; (2) irreparable harm; (3) the balance of hardships tipping in its favor; and (4) the impact of the injunction on the public interest.”).

121. STOLL-DEBELL ET AL., supra note 81, at 6.

122. 718 F.2d 1573 (Fed. Cir. 1983).

123. Id. at 1581 (“We hold that where validity and continuing infringement have been clearly established, as in this case, immediate irreparable harm is presumed.”).

124. See supra notes 111–12 and accompanying text.

125. See Smith, 718 F.2d at 1581; accord H.H. Robertson, Co. v. United Steel Deck, Inc., 820 F.2d 384, 390 (Fed. Cir. 1987) (“This presumption derives in part from the finite term of the patent grant, for patent expiration is not suspended during litigation, and the passage of time can work irremediable harm. . . . The nature of the patent grant thus weighs against holding that monetary damages will always suffice to make the patentee whole, for the principal value of a patent is its statutory right to exclude.”).

126. Smith, 718 F.2d at 1581 n.7 (“This is the rule in copyright cases.”).

127. See Roper Corp. v. Litton Sys., Inc., 757 F.2d 1266, 1272 (Fed. Cir. 1985) (“[N]o warrant exists in law to distinguish the criteria for presuming irreparable injury to the property right created by letters patent from those available to protect the property right created by copyright.”).

128. See, e.g., Richardson v. Suzuki Motor Co., 868 F.2d 1226, 1247 (Fed. Cir. 1989) (“It is the general rule that an injunction will issue when infringement has been adjudged . . .”).

129. 4 NIMMER, supra note 22, § 14.06[A][3][a].

preliminary injunctions.¹³⁰ This part explores this division by analyzing the diverse application of eBay to both patent and copyright cases before the Jacobsen decision.

A. eBay v. MercExchange

In eBay, Inc. v. MercExchange, L.L.C.,¹³¹ the Supreme Court unanimously held that permanent injunctions do not automatically follow a ruling of patent infringement,¹³² and that traditional principles of equity apply equally to patent disputes.¹³³ In the case, MercExchange claimed that eBay infringed its patent in an electronic market business method.¹³⁴ After a jury found that eBay had infringed MercExchange's valid patent and awarded damages, the district court denied MercExchange's motion for a permanent injunction.¹³⁵ The denial was based on its categorical conclusion that irreparable harm could not occur due to factors including MercExchange's willingness to license patents, and the lack of commercial activity in using them.¹³⁶ On appeal, the Federal Circuit applied its own general rule that "a permanent injunction will issue once infringement and validity have been adjudged" absent "exceptional circumstances," and reversed the district court.¹³⁷

The Supreme Court granted certiorari to address the Federal Circuit's general rule, and held that it did not conform to traditional principles of equity.¹³⁸ Citing to two previous decisions for support, including Amoco Production Co. v. Village of Gambell,¹³⁹ the Court stated that to meet these principles, a plaintiff "must demonstrate" the following four factors:

- (1) that it has suffered an irreparable injury; (2) that remedies available at law, such as monetary damages, are inadequate to compensate for that injury; (3) that, considering the balance of hardships between the plaintiff and defendant, a remedy in equity is warranted; and (4) that the public interest would not be disserved by a permanent injunction.¹⁴⁰

After reiterating that courts should not depart from traditional equitable principles without statutory direction,¹⁴¹ the Court confirmed that these principles "apply with equal force" to patent disputes, as the Patent Act's

130. See infra Parts II.B–C.

131. 547 U.S. 388 (2006).

132. Id. at 394.

133. Id. at 391.

134. Id. at 390.

135. Id. at 391.

136. Id. at 393.

137. Id. at 393–94 (quoting MercExchange, L.L.C. v. eBay, Inc., 401 F.3d 1323, 1338–39 (Fed. Cir. 2005)).

138. Id. at 393.

139. 480 U.S. 531 (1987) (rejecting the Ninth Circuit's application of the presumption of irreparable harm where plaintiffs sought preliminary injunctive relief due to defendant's violation of an environmental statute).

140. eBay, 547 U.S. at 391 (citing Amoco, 480 U.S. at 542; Weinberger v. Romero-Barcelo, 456 U.S. 305, 311–13 (1982)).

141. Id. ("As this Court has long recognized, 'a major departure from the long tradition of equity practice should not be lightly implied.'" (quoting Weinberger, 456 U.S. at 320)).

language expressly permits injunctions to issue “in accordance with the principles of equity.”¹⁴² While the Court recognized a patent holder’s fundamental right to exclude, it noted that “the creation of a right is distinct from the provision of remedies for violations of that right,” and rejected the automatic grant of an injunction once infringement was found.¹⁴³

The eBay Court then compared patent law with copyright law for additional support. First, it held that both copyright and patent law permit the right to exclude.¹⁴⁴ Further, both Acts provide that courts “may” grant injunctive relief on terms they deem reasonable to prevent infringement.¹⁴⁵ Finally, the Court held that because it had “consistently rejected invitations to replace traditional equitable considerations with a rule that an injunction automatically follows [copyright infringement],” rejection of the Federal Circuit’s general rule in the patent law context was consistent with previous rulings.¹⁴⁶ As neither lower court had applied the correct four-factor test, the Court remanded the case to the district court to exercise discretion consistent with these equitable principles, “in patent disputes no less than in other cases governed by such standards.”¹⁴⁷

Chief Justice Roberts noted in his concurrence that courts’ historical tendency to grant injunctive relief once patent infringement was found likely owed to the difficulty of protecting the right to exclude through monetary damages.¹⁴⁸ While this did not entitle a patent holder to a permanent injunction, he emphasized that “a page of history is worth a volume of logic.”¹⁴⁹ In a separate concurrence, Justice Kennedy agreed that history is instructive in applying the four-factor test, but believed that the practice of frequently issuing injunctions merely reflected the result of applying the four-factor test in historical contexts.¹⁵⁰ He stated that the current rise of an industry where patent holders threaten injunctions to seek high licensing fees presents an economically novel situation where monetary damages may sufficiently compensate for infringement, and “may affect calculus under the four-factor test.”¹⁵¹ According to Justice Kennedy, courts should therefore use their equitable discretion to determine whether past practice fits with the circumstances of their cases.¹⁵²

142. Id. at 391–92 (quoting 35 U.S.C. § 283 (2006)).

143. Id. at 392.

144. Id.

145. Id.; see also supra note 118 and accompanying text.

146. eBay, 547 U.S. at 392–93 (citing N.Y. Times Co. v. Tasini, 533 U.S. 483, 505 (2001); Dun v. Lumbermen’s Credit Ass’n, 209 U.S. 20, 23–24 (1908)). In Tasini, the Court quoted Campbell v. Acuff-Rose Music Inc. for the proposition that the “goals of copyright law ‘are not always best served by automatically granting injunctive relief.’” Tasini, 533 U.S. at 505 (quoting Campbell v. Acuff-Rose Music Inc., 510 U.S. 569, 578 n.10 (1994)). The Dun Court held that in cases where “an injunction would be unconscionable . . . the copyright owner should be remitted to his remedy at law.” Dun, 209 U.S. at 23.

147. eBay, 547 U.S. at 394.

148. Id. at 395 (Roberts, C.J., concurring).

149. Id. (quoting N.Y. Trust Co. v. Eisner, 256 U.S. 345, 349 (1921) (Holmes, J.)).

150. See id. at 395–96 (Kennedy, J., concurring).

151. Id. at 397.

152. Id.

B. eBay's Effect on the Presumption in the Patent Context

Without specific guidance from the eBay Court as to whether the presumption of irreparable harm survived its decision, district courts reached various conclusions. Although most courts agreed that eBay dismissed the presumption as applied to patent law, some continued to apply it. However, by refusing to address the issue directly, the Federal Circuit did little to clarify the confusion. This section examines these interpretations of eBay's effect on the presumption in the patent realm prior to Jacobsen.

In the first few years after eBay, the Federal Circuit did not provide guidance as to the presumption's continuing vitality. First, in Abbott Laboratories v. Andrx Pharmaceuticals, Inc.,¹⁵³ the court assumed without deciding that the presumption of irreparable harm still applied to preliminary injunctions.¹⁵⁴ The court later had two more direct opportunities to address eBay's effect on the presumption, once in a case involving a preliminary injunction,¹⁵⁵ and in another relating to permanent injunctive relief.¹⁵⁶ In discussions confined entirely to footnotes in both cases, the Federal Circuit declined to address the contention, finding it unnecessary to do so to resolve either case.¹⁵⁷

This lack of express guidance forced district courts to make sense of the seemingly inconsistent presumption in a post-eBay landscape. The majority of district courts interpreted eBay as doing away with the presumption of irreparable harm. The eBay district court reached this conclusion on remand, and found the presumption to be inconsistent with the Supreme Court's requirement that the burden be on the plaintiff to prove irreparable harm.¹⁵⁸ Most notably, the eBay district court pointed to Amoco, wherein the Supreme Court had held that the "presumption [of irreparable harm] is contrary to traditional equitable principles."¹⁵⁹ Other district courts reached the same conclusion, holding that requiring a plaintiff to prove irreparable

153. 452 F.3d 1331 (Fed. Cir. 2006).

154. Id. at 1347 ("[W]e conclude that Abbott has not established a likelihood of success on the merits. As a result, Abbott is no longer entitled to a presumption of irreparable harm.").

155. Sanofi-Synthelabo v. Apotex, Inc., 470 F.3d 1368 (Fed. Cir. 2006).

156. Amado v. Microsoft Corp., 517 F.3d 1353 (Fed. Cir. 2008).

157. See id. at 1359 n.1 ("We find it unnecessary to reach this argument, however, because regardless of whether there remains a rebuttable presumption of irreparable harm following eBay, the district court was within its discretion to find an absence of irreparable harm based on the evidence presented at trial."); Sanofi, 470 F.3d at 1383 n.9 ("Because we conclude that the district court did not clearly err in finding that Sanofi established several kinds of irreparable harm . . . we need not address this contention [that eBay rejects the presumption].").

158. See MercExchange, L.L.C. v. eBay, Inc., 500 F. Supp. 2d 556, 569 (E.D. Va. 2007) ("[A] presumption of irreparable harm is inconsistent with the Supreme Court's instruction that traditional equitable principles require the plaintiff to demonstrate that it has suffered an irreparable injury . . .").

159. Amoco Prod. Co. v. Vill. of Gambell, 480 U.S. 531, 545 (1987) (reversing Ninth Circuit precedent presuming irreparable harm "when an agency fails to evaluate thoroughly the environmental impact of a proposed action"); see supra note 139 and accompanying text.

harm could not be squared with a presumption of such harm.¹⁶⁰ Additionally, several courts also found that eBay's holding was not limited to permanent injunctions, and held that the presumption did not survive in the preliminary injunction context either.¹⁶¹ Some courts, however, held that despite eBay, the presumption still applied in the context of preliminary injunctive relief.¹⁶²

C. eBay's Effect on the Presumption in the Copyright Context

The uncertainty plaguing district courts with respect to eBay's effect on the longstanding presumption of irreparable harm was even more prevalent in the copyright context. The eBay Court's analogy of patent to copyright led many courts to apply eBay's four-factor test to injunctions in the copyright context, but there was little agreement on how far eBay cast its net. This section analyzes courts' application of eBay to copyright injunctions prior to Jacobsen, including its effect on copyright's

160. See, e.g., IMX, Inc. v. LendingTree, LLC, 469 F. Supp. 2d 203, 224 (D. Del. 2007) (noting the "now-overturned presumption that a patent holder is irreparably harmed upon a finding of infringement"); Smith & Nephew, Inc. v. Synthes (U.S.A.), 466 F. Supp. 2d 978, 982 (W.D. Tenn. 2006) ("The [eBay] Court thus rejected the traditional rebuttable presumption that a permanent injunction is to be automatically awarded to the plaintiff upon a showing of the validity and infringement of the patent."), appeal dismissed, 269 F. App'x 972 (Fed. Cir. 2008); Paice LLC v. Toyota Motor Corp., No. 2:04-CV-211, 2006 WL 2385139, at *4 (E.D. Tex. Aug. 16, 2006) ("The eBay decision demonstrates that no presumption of irreparable harm should automatically follow from a finding of infringement."), aff'd in part, vacated in part, 504 F.3d 1293 (Fed. Cir. 2007); z4 Techs., Inc. v. Microsoft Corp., 434 F. Supp. 2d 437, 440 (E.D. Tex. 2006) (holding that the presumption of irreparable harm "is not in line with the Supreme Court's holding" in eBay).

161. See, e.g., Tiber Labs., LLC v. Hawthorn Pharm., Inc., 527 F. Supp. 2d 1373, 1380 (N.D. Ga. 2007) ("eBay does not leave room for a presumption of irreparable injury in patent cases, whether raised at the preliminary or permanent injunction phase."); Novartis Pharm. Corp. v. Teva Pharm. USA, Inc., No. 05-CV-1887, 2007 WL 2669338, at *13 (D.N.J. Sept. 6, 2007) (relying on "eBay's broader holding that, on motions for injunctions, courts should not apply categorical rules and presumptions"), aff'd 280 F. App'x 996 (Fed. Cir. 2008); Sun Optics, Inc. v. FGX Int'l, Inc., No. 07-137, 2007 WL 2228569, at *1 (D. Del. Aug. 2, 2007) (holding that allowing a presumption of irreparable harm following a showing of likelihood of success on the merits seems inconsistent with eBay), appeal dismissed, 275 F. App'x 967 (Fed. Cir. 2008); Torspo Hockey Int'l, Inc. v. Kor Hockey Ltd., 491 F. Supp. 2d 871, 881 (D. Minn. 2007) (explaining that although eBay addressed permanent injunctions, "eBay's logic forbids courts to categorically presume irreparable harm in the preliminary-injunction context, even if a patentee has established that it will likely succeed on the merits"); Erico Int'l Corp. v. Doc's Mktg. Inc., No. 1:05-CV-2924, 2007 WL 108450, at *7 (N.D. Ohio Jan. 9, 2007) ("While eBay involved a permanent injunction specifically, the Court did not limit its holding to that context; the Court's reasoning likely applies with even greater force at the preliminary injunction stage."), vacated sub nom. Erico Int'l Corp. v. Vutec Corp., 516 F.3d 1350 (Fed. Cir. 2008).

162. See Pass & Seymour, Inc. v. Hubbell, Inc., 532 F. Supp. 2d 418, 432 (N.D.N.Y. 2007) (noting eBay's applicability to permanent injunctions but continuing to cite the presumption for preliminary injunctions); PHG Techs., LLC v. TimeMed Labeling Sys., Inc., No. 3:05-1091, 2006 WL 2670967, at *18 (M.D. Tenn. Sept. 18, 2006) (citing the presumption in a preliminary injunction motion without referencing eBay), appeal dismissed, 225 F. App'x 897 (Fed. Cir. 2007); Christiana Indus. v. Empire Elecs., Inc., 443 F. Supp. 2d 870, 884 (E.D. Mich. 2006) (holding that "eBay did not invalidate the presumption" because "the eBay Court addressed the proper analysis for permanent injunctive relief"), appeal dismissed, 219 F. App'x 987 (Fed. Cir. 2007).

presumption of irreparable harm. After first discussing circuit courts' adoption of eBay in the context of permanent injunctive relief, this section then explores district courts' conflicting conclusions concerning whether, in light of eBay, harm could still be presumed following probable success of copyright infringement.

1. Circuit Courts Apply eBay to Permanent Injunctions

Prior to Jacobsen, three circuit courts held that eBay applied to the grant of a permanent injunction for copyright infringement.¹⁶³ In Christopher Phelps & Associates, LLC v. Galloway,¹⁶⁴ the Fourth Circuit rejected the view that a copyright holder is entitled to permanent injunctive relief after infringement is proven.¹⁶⁵ In Galloway, the plaintiff argued entitlement to injunctive relief, despite recovery of damages, based on past infringement and a threat of continuing infringement.¹⁶⁶ The court rejected this contention, emphasizing that eBay "reaffirmed the traditional showing that a plaintiff must make to obtain a permanent injunction in any type of case, including a patent or copyright case."¹⁶⁷ The Eleventh Circuit reached a similar conclusion in Peter Letterese & Associates, Inc. v. World Institute of Scientology Enterprises, International,¹⁶⁸ where the court held that eBay's principles applied to permanent injunctions in the copyright context, noting that "a permanent injunction does not automatically issue upon a finding of copyright infringement."¹⁶⁹ The court cited language from the eBay decision analogizing the Copyright Act to the Patent Act to support its application of eBay to copyright infringement cases.¹⁷⁰ Finally, the First Circuit joined the Fourth and Eleventh Circuits in CoxCom, Inc. v. Chaffee,¹⁷¹ citing eBay for the proposition that "[a] plaintiff seeking a permanent injunction is traditionally required to satisfy a four-factor

163. CoxCom, Inc. v. Chaffee, 536 F.3d 101, 112 (1st Cir. 2008); Peter Letterese & Assocs., Inc. v. World Inst. of Scientology Enters., Int'l, 533 F.3d 1287, 1323 (11th Cir. 2008); Christopher Phelps & Assocs., LLC v. Galloway, 492 F.3d 532, 543 (4th Cir. 2007). But see Bridgeport Music, Inc. v. Justin Combs Publ'g, 507 F.3d 470, 492 (6th Cir. 2007) (holding, without any discussion of eBay, that a plaintiff is entitled to a permanent injunction once past copyright infringement has been established and there is a threat of continuing infringement); Universal Furniture Int'l, Inc. v. Collezione Europa USA, Inc., 196 F. App'x 166, 169–70 (4th Cir. 2006) (per curiam) (citing the presumption as applied to preliminary injunctions without any mention of eBay, but finding it rebutted by evidence defeating plaintiff's prima facie infringement claim).

164. 492 F.3d 532 (4th Cir. 2007).

165. See id. at 543.

166. See id.

167. Id.

168. 533 F.3d 1287 (11th Cir. 2008).

169. Id. at 1323.

170. Id. at 1323 ("Like the Patent Act, the Copyright Act provides that courts may grant injunctive relief on such terms as it may deem reasonable to prevent or restrain infringement of a copyright." (quoting eBay, Inc. v. MercExchange, L.L.C., 547 U.S. 388, 392 (2006))).

171. 536 F.3d 101 (1st Cir. 2008).

test.”¹⁷² However, none of the circuits addressed eBay’s potential effect on the presumption of irreparable harm.¹⁷³

2. District Courts Reach Conflicting Conclusions

With no clear direction from either the Supreme Court or the circuit courts regarding eBay’s effect on copyright law’s presumption of irreparable harm, district courts applied eBay in the copyright context prior to Jacobsen in myriad ways. While several courts applied eBay’s four factors to the copyright permanent injunction analysis,¹⁷⁴ some of them continued to presume irreparable harm upon a showing of probable success on the merits.¹⁷⁵ Other courts held that eBay did not apply to preliminary injunctions and continued to apply the presumption of irreparable harm to such relief,¹⁷⁶ while at least one claimed to apply eBay to preliminary injunctions and yet continued to enforce the presumption once a likelihood of success was established.¹⁷⁷ The confusion that troubled district courts concerning the presumption’s continuing vitality in copyright preliminary injunctions was aptly illustrated by the U.S. District Court for the Western

172. Id. at 112 (citing eBay, 547 U.S. at 391 (2006)).

173. While the Fourth Circuit did not state that it was presuming irreparable harm upon liability, it based its finding that irreparable harm had been suffered purely on copyright’s intangible nature, and required no further proof from the plaintiff. See Christopher Phelps & Assocs., LLC v. Galloway, 492 F.3d 532, 544 (4th Cir. 2007) (“Irreparable injury often derives from the nature of copyright violations, which deprive the copyright holder of intangible exclusive rights.”).

174. See, e.g., Propet USA, Inc. v. Shugart, No. C06-0186, 2007 WL 4376204, at *2 (W.D. Wash. Dec. 13, 2007) (holding that eBay applies in the copyright context because the eBay Court stated its approach to patent cases was consistent with injunction treatment under the Copyright Act); Litecubes, L.L.C. v. N. Light Prods., Inc., No. 4:04CV00485, 2006 WL 5700252, at *10 (E.D. Mo. Aug. 25, 2006) (holding that the similarity of language between the Patent and Copyright Acts demonstrates that federal courts have similar authority to grant permanent injunctions to copyright and patent holders), aff’d on other grounds, 523 F.3d 1353 (Fed. Cir. 2008).

175. See Idearc Media Corp. v. Nw. Directories, Inc., 623 F. Supp. 2d 1223, 1234 (D. Or. 2008) (explaining that it was “mindful” of the eBay decision and applying the eBay factors to its permanent injunction analysis, but also presuming irreparable harm in accordance with precedent); Warner Bros. Entm’t, Inc. v. Carsagno, No. 06 CV 2676, 2007 WL 1655666, at *4–5 (E.D.N.Y. June 4, 2007) (holding that while the plaintiff must meet eBay’s four factors to obtain permanent injunctive relief, including that it has suffered an irreparable injury, such harm was demonstrated by a prima facie case of infringement).

176. See, e.g., Lennon v. Premise Media Corp., 556 F. Supp. 2d 310, 319 n.1 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (stating that eBay did not abrogate the presumption in the copyright preliminary injunction context because eBay involved only the Patent Act and permanent relief); Advance Magazine Publishers, Inc. v. Leach, 466 F. Supp. 2d 628, 638 (D. Md. 2006) (applying pre-eBay Fourth Circuit precedent presuming irreparable harm in preliminary injunction motions once the plaintiff establishes prima facie copyright infringement, but noting that it would apply the eBay factors when determining permanent injunctive relief).

177. See Wireless TV Studios, Inc. v. Digital Dispatch Sys., Inc., No. 07 CV 5103, 2008 WL 2474626, at *3 (E.D.N.Y. June 19, 2008) (citing eBay for the traditional equitable principles governing injunctive relief, yet holding that the presumption of irreparable harm failed only because plaintiff did not establish the required likelihood of success on the merits).

District of North Carolina's treatment of the issue, where two divisions of the same district court reached opposite conclusions.¹⁷⁸

The clearest rejection of the presumption came from the U.S. District Court for the Central District of California in *Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios, Inc. v. Grokster, Ltd.*¹⁷⁹ The court held the eBay test to be directly applicable to permanent injunctions for copyright infringement,¹⁸⁰ and rejected the Ninth Circuit's pre-eBay presumption of irreparable harm in light of eBay's emphasis on the plaintiffs' burden of proof in establishing such harm.¹⁸¹ While the court ruled on a permanent injunction, it also opined that the presumption as applied to preliminary injunctive relief "may itself have to be reevaluated in light of eBay," due in part to eBay's favorable citation of Amoco.¹⁸² The Grokster court first noted that this demonstrated that Amoco's holding that "a presumption of irreparable harm for a preliminary injunction is 'contrary to traditional equitable principles'" was relevant to intellectual property cases.¹⁸³ Further, the court believed that eBay's reliance on Amoco, a preliminary injunction case, as support for the four-factor test indicated the Court's belief that permanent and preliminary injunctions should be treated similarly.¹⁸⁴ Ultimately, the court read eBay and Amoco in conjunction to establish that a court should not depart from the traditional equitable analysis unless statutorily directed,¹⁸⁵ and concluded that nothing in the Copyright Act permitted such a departure

178. Compare Nat'l League of Junior Cotillions v. Porter, No. 3:06-cv-508, 2007 WL 2316823, at *5–6 (W.D.N.C. Aug. 9, 2007) (continuing to apply the precedential presumption of irreparable harm in light of the lack of clarification from the Fourth Circuit and the "slight record," but making clear "it [did] not rest any conclusion that the plaintiff has suffered irreparable harm solely on the presumption"), aff'd on other grounds, 280 F. App'x 322 (4th Cir. 2008), with Allora, LLC v. Brownstone, Inc., No. 1:07CV87, 2007 WL 1246448, at *5 (W.D.N.C. Apr. 27, 2007) (refusing to follow Fourth Circuit pre-eBay precedent presuming irreparable harm upon a prima facie showing of copyright infringement without further Fourth Circuit guidance).

179. 518 F. Supp. 2d 1197 (C.D. Cal. 2007).

180. Id. at 1209 (stating that eBay established that permanent injunctions should be treated the same under the Copyright Act as the Patent Act and "[b]y implication, the four eBay factors are the only relevant considerations for purposes of Plaintiffs' instant motion under the Copyright Act").

181. Id. ("This Court can identify no place for a separate and distinct two-part . . . test or 'general rule' that could circumvent eBay."). The court also cited several patent infringement decisions finding that eBay did away with the presumption of irreparable harm as related to permanent injunctions. See id. at 1209–10 (collecting cases); see also supra note 160 (collecting cases).

182. Id. at 1212–13. But see id. at 1212 (arguing that it might also be sensible to permit the presumption in preliminary injunction motions due to the temporary status of such relief).

183. Id. at 1212–14 (quoting Amoco Prod. Co. v. Vill. of Gambell, 480 U.S. 531, 545 (1987)) (noting that prior to eBay, the Amoco decision seemed limited to its holding regarding the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act).

184. See id. at 1214; see also supra note 80 and accompanying text.

185. See Grokster, 518 F. Supp. 2d at 1214.

to presume irreparable harm in either the preliminary or permanent injunction contexts.¹⁸⁶

III. JACOBSEN V. KATZER AND THE SUBSEQUENT DEATH OF THE COPYRIGHT PRESUMPTION

As discussed in Part II, lack of Supreme Court clarification as to whether eBay abrogated the longstanding presumption of irreparable harm resulted in a multitude of conflicting district court applications of eBay to copyright injunctions.¹⁸⁷ Against this backdrop, the Federal Circuit decided Jacobsen v. Katzer,¹⁸⁸ in which it addressed the presumption of irreparable harm as applied to copyright preliminary injunctions.¹⁸⁹ Part III first explores Jacobsen's reaffirmation of the pre-eBay presumption. It then chronicles how subsequent case law has rejected the Federal Circuit's logic and spelled the death of the presumption in the context of copyright injunctions.

A. Jacobsen v. Katzer: Applying a Pre-eBay Standard to a Post-eBay Case

In Jacobsen, the plaintiff appealed from an order denying him preliminary injunctive relief for copyright infringement.¹⁹⁰ Robert Jacobsen owned a copyright in a software code, which he made available for free downloading on the internet pursuant to an open-source license.¹⁹¹ Jacobsen accused the defendants of incorporating his code into their products without abiding by the license.¹⁹² Jacobsen moved for a preliminary injunction in the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of California, arguing that he was entitled to a presumption of irreparable harm under Ninth Circuit law once he demonstrated prima facie copyright infringement.¹⁹³ The court concluded that the defendants had breached a nonexclusive license, and only breach of contract violations—and not copyright infringement—existed.¹⁹⁴ Because a breach of contract created no presumption of irreparable harm, the court denied injunctive relief, and Jacobsen appealed to the Federal Circuit for reversal of the interlocutory order denying the preliminary injunction.¹⁹⁵

In addressing its appellate jurisdiction over the copyright case, the Federal Circuit found that Jacobsen's complaint arose in part under the patent laws, because Jacobsen also sought a declaratory judgment that he

186. See id. (emphasizing that the Copyright Act merely states that a court “may . . . grant temporary and final injunctions on such terms as it may deem reasonable to prevent or restrain infringement of a copyright” (quoting 17 U.S.C. § 502(a) (2006))).

187. See supra Part II.C.2.

188. 535 F.3d 1373 (Fed. Cir. 2008).

189. See id. at 1377.

190. See id.

191. See id. at 1376 (defining an open-source license as a “public license” through which Jacobsen made his software “available for free public download from a website without a financial fee”).

192. See id.

193. See id. at 1377.

194. See id.

195. See id.

did not infringe a patent owned by the defendant.¹⁹⁶ Therefore, the court exercised exclusive jurisdiction over the appeal of the interlocutory order denying Jacobsen's request for a preliminary injunction.¹⁹⁷ In determining choice of law, the court stated that established Federal Circuit precedent required it to apply regional circuit law to issues not exclusively assigned to it—in this case, Ninth Circuit law with respect to preliminary injunction standards for copyright infringement.¹⁹⁸ At the time, the Ninth Circuit had applied its standard two-part test for issuing copyright preliminary injunctions¹⁹⁹ in one post-eBay case, Perfect 10, Inc. v. Amazon.com, Inc. (Perfect 10 II),²⁰⁰ where it had not addressed eBay. The Ninth Circuit had not addressed the presumption of irreparable harm since eBay was decided.²⁰¹

The Jacobsen court cited Perfect 10 II in applying the Ninth Circuit's two-part test for issuing a preliminary injunction,²⁰² and also applied the Ninth Circuit's pre-eBay presumption of irreparable harm when the copyright holder has shown a likelihood of success on the merits.²⁰³ It did so even as it recognized that eBay may have altered the landscape; the court expressly addressed the eBay decision and its potential impact on Ninth Circuit law in a passing citation to Grokster,²⁰⁴ but did not afford this decision any weight in its analysis. Instead, the court concluded that the

196. Id. (“[I]n the context of a complaint seeking a declaration of noninfringement, the action threatened by the declaratory defendant . . . would be an action for patent infringement,” and “[s]uch an action clearly arises under the patent laws.” (quoting Golan v. Pingel Enter., Inc., 310 F.3d 1360, 1367 (Fed. Cir. 2002))).

197. Id.; see also supra notes 37–39 and accompanying text (describing the relevant law conferring Federal Circuit jurisdiction over pendent non-patent claims).

198. Jacobsen, 535 F.3d at 1377–78; see also supra Part I.A.2.

199. See supra notes 102–03 and accompanying text.

200. 487 F.3d 701, 713–14 (9th Cir. 2007), amended by 508 F.3d 1146 (9th Cir. 2007).

201. Perfect 10 II, the only Ninth Circuit case at the time of the Jacobsen ruling that involved a copyright preliminary injunction post-eBay, refrained from addressing the presumption of irreparable harm. See id. at 733 (“[W]e do not address the parties’ dispute over whether the district court abused its discretion in determining that Perfect 10 satisfied the irreparable harm element of a preliminary injunction.”).

202. See Jacobsen, 535 F.3d at 1378 (“[T]he Ninth Circuit requires demonstration of (1) a combination of probability of success on the merits and the possibility of irreparable harm; or (2) serious questions going to the merits where the balance of hardships tips sharply in the moving party’s favor.” (citing Perfect 10 II, 487 F.3d at 713–14)). Such a decision without analysis of eBay was not, however, binding Ninth Circuit precedent regarding eBay’s application to copyright preliminary injunctions. See Thacker v. FCC (In re Magnacom Wireless, LLC), 503 F.3d 984, 993–94 (9th Cir. 2007) (“[S]tatements made in passing, without analysis, are not binding precedent.”); United States v. Johnson, 256 F.3d 895, 915 (9th Cir. 2001) (“Where it is clear that a statement is made casually and without analysis, where the statement is uttered in passing without due consideration of the alternatives . . . it may be appropriate to re-visit the issue in a later case.”); cf. Flexible Lifeline Sys., Inc. v. Precision Lift, Inc., 654 F.3d 989, 997 (9th Cir. 2011) (“[S]ummary treatment of the presumption without consideration of the effect of eBay and Winter does not bind this panel or constitute an affirmation of the presumption’s continued vitality.”).

203. Jacobsen, 535 F.3d at 1378 (“In cases involving copyright claims, where a copyright holder has shown a likelihood of success on the merits of a copyright infringement claim, the Ninth Circuit has held that irreparable harm is presumed.” (citing LGS Architects, Inc. v. Concordia Homes of Nev., 434 F.3d 1150, 1155–56 (9th Cir. 2006))).

204. See id.

plaintiff must show “a likelihood of success on the merits . . . from which irreparable harm is presumed.”²⁰⁵ Finding that the open-source license terms were enforceable copyright conditions, the court remanded to the district court to determine whether the two-part standard, including presumption, was met.²⁰⁶

B. Jacobsen’s Aftermath

Shortly after the Jacobsen court directed the district court to presume irreparable harm upon a finding of prima facie copyright infringement, courts continued to chip away at the presumption as applied to copyright preliminary injunctions. First, the Supreme Court in Winter rejected the Ninth Circuit’s “possibility of irreparable harm” standard for preliminary injunctive relief. Next, three circuits explicitly abandoned the presumption for purposes of obtaining copyright preliminary injunctions, ruling that the doctrine was inconsistent with both eBay and Winter. Finally, the Federal Circuit has recently cited agreement with its sister circuits in abandoning the presumption in the patent context. This section examines each of these opinions.

1. Winter v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc.

Three months after Jacobsen, the Supreme Court handed down Winter v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc.,²⁰⁷ where plaintiffs sought a preliminary injunction to prevent the Navy from employing a sonar-training program that it felt harmed marine animals.²⁰⁸ After the Ninth Circuit upheld the injunction, the Supreme Court reversed.²⁰⁹ The Court rejected the Ninth Circuit’s standard that a preliminary injunction may issue based on a “possibility” of irreparable harm if the plaintiff demonstrated a strong likelihood of success on the merits.²¹⁰ The Court held that this standard was “too lenient” and inconsistent with the “extraordinary remedy” of injunctive relief, which requires a clear showing by the plaintiff that she is entitled to this remedy.²¹¹ Rather, the Court required plaintiffs to establish a likelihood of irreparable injury.²¹²

205. Id. (emphasis added). The court continued that in the alternative, Jacobsen must demonstrate the other option provided by the Ninth Circuit’s test, “a fair chance of success on the merits and a clear disparity in the relative hardships that tips sharply in his favor.” Id.

206. See id. at 1382–83 (“[W]e remand to enable the District Court to determine whether Jacobsen has demonstrated (1) a likelihood of success on the merits and either a presumption of irreparable harm or a demonstration of irreparable harm; or (2) a fair chance of success on the merits and a clear disparity in the relative hardships and tipping in his favor.”).

207. 555 U.S. 7 (2008).

208. Id. at 12.

209. Id.

210. Id. at 22.

211. Id. (citing Mazurek v. Armstrong, 520 U.S. 968, 972 (1997) (per curiam)).

212. See id. (citing several cases for the proposition that this standard has been “frequently reiterated”).

In reaching this conclusion, the Court emphasized that preliminary injunctive relief is “an extraordinary remedy never awarded as of right,”²¹³ and confirmed the four-factor test that must be employed in all preliminary injunction cases: “A plaintiff seeking a preliminary injunction must establish that he is likely to succeed on the merits, that he is likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, that the balance of equities tips in his favor, and that an injunction is in the public interest.”²¹⁴ The Winter Court also reiterated that such an analysis, which paralleled the principles articulated in eBay,²¹⁵ also applied to permanent injunctions.²¹⁶

2. Circuits Abandon the Presumption for Copyright Preliminary Injunctions

Although Winter, like eBay, did not explicitly reject the presumption of irreparable harm in cases concerning copyright injunctions, it had far reaching implications. While the Jacobsen court had instructed the Northern District of California on remand to apply the Ninth Circuit’s two-part test and presume irreparable harm upon a showing of likelihood of success,²¹⁷ the district court did not comply. Instead, it held that Winter had changed the injunction landscape and abandoned the presumption of irreparable harm upon which the Federal Circuit had relied.²¹⁸ Because the Supreme Court’s intervening authority bound the district court, the Northern District of California held that a plaintiff must meet each element of Winter’s four-factor test before the court could issue a preliminary injunction.²¹⁹ Most other district courts that addressed the question similarly held that the presumption did not survive both Winter and eBay in the copyright context.²²⁰

213. Id. at 24.

214. Id. at 20.

215. See supra note 140 and accompanying text.

216. See Winter, 555 U.S. at 33 (citing Amoco Prod. Co. v. Vill. of Gambell, 480 U.S. 531, 546 n.12 (1987)); id. at 33 (“[O]ur analysis of the propriety of preliminary relief is applicable to any permanent injunction as well.”).

217. See supra notes 205–06 and accompanying text.

218. See Jacobsen v. Katzer, 609 F. Supp. 2d 925, 936 (N.D. Cal. 2009).

219. See id. at 937.

220. See, e.g., Credit Bureau Connection, Inc. v. Pardini, 726 F. Supp. 2d 1107, 1122–23 (E.D. Cal. 2010) (holding that Winter and eBay support the proposition that the presumption for irreparable harm does not exist “even in intellectual property cases”); Aurora World, Inc. v. Ty Inc., 719 F. Supp. 2d 1115, 1166–69 (C.D. Cal. 2009) (holding that because eBay is not limited to patent cases or permanent injunctions, “[the plaintiff] is not entitled to invoke a presumption of irreparable harm”); Momento, Inc. v. Seccion Amarilla USA, No. C 09-1223, 2009 WL 1974798, at *3 (N.D. Cal. July 8, 2009) (“The Court agrees . . . that it should not automatically presume a demonstration of irreparable harm in copyright cases since the Supreme Court’s decision in eBay.”). But see Salinger v. Colting, 641 F. Supp. 2d 250, 268–69 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) (“[eBay] dealt only with the presumption of irreparable harm in the patent law context, and thus is not controlling . . . in the copyright context.”), vacated, 607 F.3d 68 (2d Cir. 2010); RDI of Mich., LLC v. Mich. Coin-Op Vending, Inc., 631 F. Supp. 2d 868, 874 (E.D. Mich. 2008) (applying the Sixth Circuit’s pre-eBay presumption in a copyright preliminary injunction case without mentioning eBay).

Circuit courts also responded to the changed landscape following eBay and Winter. The Second, Ninth, and Fourth Circuits have held that eBay's four-factor test is applicable to preliminary injunction determinations in the copyright context,²²¹ and that a likelihood of success on the merits no longer raises a presumption of irreparable harm.²²²

a. The Second Circuit

The Second Circuit's decision in *Salinger v. Colting*²²³ marked the first time that any circuit court had squarely addressed whether eBay abrogated the presumption of irreparable harm.²²⁴ In Salinger, the court held that eBay had abrogated two of the circuit's rules: (1) its longstanding two-part test for issuing a preliminary injunction in the copyright context, and (2) its standard of presuming irreparable harm once a plaintiff establishes a likelihood of success on the merits.²²⁵ The case involved a suit by J.D. Salinger, who alleged that Fredrik Colting's purported sequel to Salinger's novel Catcher in the Rye constituted copyright infringement.²²⁶ The U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York applied the Second Circuit's two-part test for issuing preliminary injunctions, and, having found that plaintiff Salinger established a prima facie case of copyright infringement, "presumed irreparable harm without discussion."²²⁷

The Second Circuit vacated and remanded for consideration of traditional equitable principles, holding that eBay applied to both copyright infringement and preliminary injunctive relief.²²⁸ Indeed, while the court limited its holding to copyright, it indicated a belief that eBay's principles extended to the grant of any type of injunction.²²⁹ Regarding copyright, the court held that the eBay decision was not limited to patent cases,²³⁰ and that by relying upon copyright cases, the eBay Court made "clear that [it] did

221. The First and Eleventh Circuits have applied eBay to trademark infringement, but both have declined to decide whether the presumption of irreparable harm survived eBay. See, e.g., Peoples Fed. Sav. Bank v. People's United Bank, No. 10-2053, 2012 WL 414251, at *6 n.11 (1st Cir. Feb. 10, 2012); N. Am. Med. Corp. v. Axiom Worldwide, Inc., 522 F.3d 1211, 1228 (11th Cir. 2008). Trademark infringement analysis is beyond the scope of this Note.

222. See Bethesda Softworks, L.L.C. v. Interplay Entm't Corp., No. 11-1860, 2011 WL 5084587, at *2-3 (4th Cir. Oct. 26, 2011) (per curiam); Flexible Lifeline Sys., Inc., v. Precision Lift, Inc., 654 F.3d 989, 998 (9th Cir. 2011) (per curiam); Perfect 10, Inc. v. Google, Inc. (Perfect 10 III), 653 F.3d 976, 981 (9th Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 80 U.S.L.W. 3366 (U.S. Mar. 5, 2012) (No. 11-704); Salinger v. Colting, 607 F.3d 68, 82 (2d Cir. 2010).

223. 607 F.3d 68 (2d Cir. 2010).

224. Newman, supra note 22, at 357.

225. Salinger, 607 F.3d at 74-75; see also supra note 102 and accompanying text.

226. Salinger, 607 F.3d at 72.

227. Id.; see also Salinger v. Colting, 641 F. Supp. 2d 250, 268-69 (S.D.N.Y. 2009), vacated, 607 F.3d 68.

228. See id. at 77.

229. See id. at 78 n.7.

230. See id. at 78 (construing eBay's reasoning that the logic of other cases employing the traditional principles of equity (Weinberger & Amoco) should apply in the patent context to conclude that "[t]hese familiar principles apply with equal force to disputes arising under the Patent Act'" (quoting eBay, Inc. v. MercExchange, L.L.C., 547 U.S. 388, 391 (2006))).

not view patent and copyright injunctions as different in kind, or as requiring different standards.”²³¹ The Second Circuit also held that eBay’s application to preliminary injunctions was clear because the eBay Court relied upon Amoco, a preliminary injunction case, in articulating the traditional four-factor test.²³² Moreover, the Winter Court had “in fact applied eBay in a case involving a preliminary injunction.”²³³

In light of the traditional equitable principles articulated in Winter and eBay, the Second Circuit formulated a new four-part test for copyright preliminary injunctions.²³⁴ Regarding the second prong, irreparable harm, the court squarely rejected its long-held presumption standard, and held that “[a]fter eBay, . . . courts must not simply presume irreparable harm.”²³⁵ Rather, plaintiffs must now show that a lack of injunctive relief will “actually cause irreparable harm.”²³⁶ The Second Circuit upheld the district court’s finding of infringement—the first factor—but remanded back to the Southern District of New York to apply the remaining three factors, including proof of irreparable harm.²³⁷ Notably, the Second Circuit contrasted the Federal Circuit’s decision in Jacobsen to its own in a footnote,²³⁸ alluding to a possible circuit split regarding whether eBay abrogated the presumption of irreparable harm as applied to copyright cases.²³⁹

231. Id. The Second Circuit mentioned the eBay Court’s comparison of patent to copyright in noting that both Acts permit injunctive relief to be granted when the court deems reasonable, and both grant the owner a right to exclude. Id. (citing eBay, 547 U.S. at 392).

232. See id. at 78–79 (emphasizing that the Amoco Court equated the standards for granting preliminary and permanent injunctions).

233. Id. at 79. While the Winter Court never explicitly mentioned eBay, the Second Circuit pointed to the Court’s “broad, unqualified language,” id., describing the preliminary injunction standard as “an extraordinary remedy never awarded as of right,” and one in which “courts must balance the competing claims of injury,” “must consider the effect on each party of the granting or withholding of the requested relief,” and “pay particular regard for the public consequences,” id. (quoting Winter v. Natural Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 24 (2008)).

234. See id. at 79–80 (holding that (1) plaintiff must demonstrate “either a likelihood of success on the merits or . . . sufficiently serious questions going to the merits to make them a fair ground for litigation and a balance of hardships tipping decidedly in the plaintiff’s favor,” (2) “[plaintiff] is likely to suffer irreparable injury in the absence of an injunction,” (3) “the balance of hardships between the plaintiff and defendant . . . [must] tip[] in the plaintiff’s favor,” and (4) “the court must ensure that the public interest would not be disserved by the issuance of a preliminary injunction.” (internal quotations and citations omitted)).

235. Id. at 82; see also id. at 80 (“The court must not adopt a ‘categorical’ or ‘general’ rule or presume that the plaintiff will suffer irreparable harm.” (quoting eBay, 547 U.S. at 391)).

236. Id. at 82.

237. Id. at 83.

238. Id. at 77 n.6 (“[T]he Federal Circuit has, without discussion, applied a pre-eBay standard in one post-eBay copyright case involving a preliminary injunction.”).

239. See Injunction in Salinger Case to be Reweighed in Light of Supreme Court’s Holding in eBay, 78 U.S.L.W. 1721 (May 18, 2010) (“The court noted a possible circuit split on whether the eBay standard applies to copyright cases, with the Federal Circuit apparently holding it does not.”).

b. The Ninth Circuit

After the Second Circuit rejected the presumption as applied to copyright preliminary injunctions, the Ninth Circuit followed suit in two separate decisions. In Perfect 10, Inc. v. Google, Inc. (Perfect 10 III), the Ninth Circuit applied Winter's four-part preliminary injunction test and "effectively overruled" its longstanding precedent that a likelihood of success on the merits of a copyright claim raises a presumption of irreparable harm.²⁴⁰ The case involved a lawsuit against Google and Amazon.com for infringement of Perfect 10's copyrighted images.²⁴¹ The district court denied Perfect 10's motion for a preliminary injunction on the grounds that it had failed to show a likelihood of irreparable harm.²⁴² Perfect 10 argued on appeal that the court must apply the precedential presumption of irreparable harm due to a strong showing of likelihood of success on the merits.²⁴³

However, the Ninth Circuit held that eBay abrogated this presumption.²⁴⁴ Agreeing with the Second Circuit in Salinger, the court found that eBay clarified that the Copyright Act's permissive language²⁴⁵ did not demonstrate a congressional intent to depart from traditional equitable principles to allow such a presumption.²⁴⁶ Further, the court stated that Supreme Court precedent compelled the holding that eBay's rule extends to preliminary injunctive relief, citing Amoco for the proposition that there is little difference between preliminary and permanent injunctions.²⁴⁷ Ultimately, the court effectively overruled its precedent, holding the presumption of irreparable harm to be "clearly irreconcilable" with eBay's reasoning.²⁴⁸

Several weeks later, another panel of the Ninth Circuit reached the same conclusion after a thorough analysis of the doctrine. In Flexible Lifeline

240. 653 F.3d 976, 981 (9th Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 80 U.S.L.W. 3366 (U.S. Mar. 5, 2012) (No. 11-704) (quoting Miller v. Gammie, 335 F.3d 889, 893 (9th Cir. 2003) (en banc), for the proposition that where the reasoning of prior Ninth Circuit authority is clearly irreconcilable with intervening Supreme Court authority, a three-judge panel is bound by the later Supreme Court authority, and should reject prior circuit opinion as having been effectively overruled).

241. See Perfect 10 III, 653 F.3d at 978. This appeal marked the second time the Ninth Circuit dealt with Perfect 10's motion for a preliminary injunction against defendants Google and Amazon. Id. Interestingly, the first appeal, Perfect 10 II, was cited by the Federal Circuit in Jacobsen to enumerate the two-part test for preliminary injunctions in the Ninth Circuit. See supra note 202.

242. See Perfect 10 III, 653 F.3d at 977.

243. See id. at 980.

244. See id.

245. The Copyright Act states that a court "may" grant injunctive relief "on such terms as it may deem reasonable to prevent or restrain infringement of a copyright." 17 U.S.C. § 502(a) (2006); Perfect 10 III, 653 F.3d at 980 (citing eBay, Inc. v. MercExchange, L.L.C., 547 U.S. 388, 392 (2006)).

246. Id. at 980.

247. Id. at 981 (citing Amoco Prod. Co. v. Vill. of Gambell, 480 U.S. 531, 546 n.12 (1987)); cf. supra note 232 (noting the Second Circuit's identical reasoning).

248. Perfect 10 III, 653 F.3d at 981 (quoting Miller v. Gammie, 335 F.3d 889, 893 (9th Cir. 2003) (en banc)).

Systems, Inc. v. Precision Lift, Inc., the plaintiff sued Precision Lift for copyright infringement of technical drawings of aircraft maintenance stands, and moved for a preliminary injunction.²⁴⁹ The U.S. District Court for the District of Montana, finding that Flexible Lifeline was likely to succeed on its copyright infringement claim, granted the preliminary injunction based on the Ninth Circuit's precedential presumption of irreparable harm.²⁵⁰

The Ninth Circuit held that eBay applied to copyright cases as well as patent cases, and to preliminary as well as permanent injunctions.²⁵¹ The Ninth Circuit's reasoning paralleled that of the Second Circuit in Salinger, as the Flexible Lifeline court held that eBay's extension to copyright is discernable from the comparison the Court drew between patent and copyright protection.²⁵² The Ninth Circuit also similarly held that eBay applies with equal force to preliminary injunctions due to eBay's reliance on *Amoco*²⁵³ and Winter's reaffirmation of the four-factor test to a preliminary injunction.²⁵⁴

After reiterating the traditional four-part test cited in Winter for granting a preliminary injunction in any case,²⁵⁵ the court effectively overruled its precedential presumption of irreparable harm, and preconditioned injunctive relief on the plaintiff's demonstration of irreparable harm.²⁵⁶ The court then noted the agreement of other circuits and authorities in holding that the presumption did not survive eBay and Winter.²⁵⁷ It vacated and remanded to the district court to make appropriate factual determinations concerning

249. 654 F.3d 989, 992 (9th Cir. 2011) (per curiam).

250. Id. at 993.

251. Id. at 996.

252. Id. at 995–96 (noting eBay's comparison of patent to copyright and construing eBay's emphasis on “consistently reject[ing] invitations to replace traditional equitable considerations with a rule that an injunction automatically follows [copyright infringement]” as proof that the presumption of irreparable harm is improper under eBay (quoting eBay, Inc. v. MercExchange, L.L.C., 547 U.S. 388, 392–93 (2006))); cf. supra note 231 and accompanying text (discussing the Second Circuit's similar reasoning in Salinger).

253. Flexible Lifeline, 654 F.3d at 996 (citing Amoco Prod. Co. v. Vill. of Gambell, 480 U.S. 531, 546 n.12 (1987)); cf. supra notes 232, 247 and accompanying text (discussing the identical reasoning of the Second Circuit in Salinger and the Ninth Circuit in Perfect 10 III).

254. Flexible Lifeline, 654 F.3d at 996–97 (detailing the Winter decision, which rejected as “too lenient” the Ninth Circuit's own holding requiring a possibility of irreparable harm (quoting Winter v. Natural Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 22 (2008))). The Flexible Lifeline court stated, “If our past standard . . . is ‘too lenient,’ then surely a standard which presumes irreparable harm without requiring any showing at all is also ‘too lenient.’” Id. at 997; cf. supra notes 232–33 and accompanying text (discussing the Second Circuit's identical reasoning in Salinger).

255. Flexible Lifeline, 654 F.3d at 994. The Ninth Circuit had previously held Winter's four-part test controlling for all preliminary injunctions. See Am. Trucking Ass'ns, Inc. v. City of Los Angeles, 559 F.3d 1046, 1052 (9th Cir. 2009).

256. Flexible Lifeline, 654 F.3d at 998.

257. Id. at 998–1000 (citing Perfect 10 III, 653 F.3d at 981; Salinger v. Colting, 607 F.3d 68, 74–79 (2d Cir. 2010); CoxCom, Inc. v. Chaffee, 536 F.3d 101, 112 (1st Cir. 2008); Christopher Phelps & Assocs., LLC v. Galloway, 492 F.3d 532, 543 (4th Cir. 2007); 4 NIMMER, supra note 22, § 14.06[A][5]; William W. Schwarzer, A. Wallace Tashima & James M. Wagstaffe, CALIFORNIA PRACTICE GUIDE: FEDERAL CIVIL PROCEDURE BEFORE TRIAL, ¶¶ 13:58.25–26 (2011)).

irreparable harm, and its emphatic disposal of the presumption of irreparable harm could not ring more clearly.²⁵⁸

c. The Fourth Circuit

In Bethesda Softworks, L.L.C. v. Interplay Entertainment Corp., the Fourth Circuit joined the Second and Ninth Circuits in declaring the presumption of irreparable harm no longer applicable in copyright cases.²⁵⁹ There, the plaintiff sought a preliminary injunction to prevent the defendant from infringing plaintiff's copyrights in a video game series.²⁶⁰ The U.S. District Court for the District of Maryland denied the motion due to plaintiff's failure to establish a likelihood of irreparable harm.²⁶¹ When the plaintiff argued that irreparable harm may be presumed upon a showing of likelihood of success on the merits, the Fourth Circuit held that in eBay, the "Supreme Court declared such presumptions inappropriate."²⁶²

The court found that eBay applies in the copyright context due to eBay's analogizing of the approach under the Patent Act to the Copyright Act's scheme.²⁶³ Further, the Fourth Circuit held that any differences between permanent and preliminary injunctive relief are insufficient to warrant applying the presumption to permanent, but not preliminary injunctions, noting the Second and Ninth Circuits' similar conclusions.²⁶⁴ Finally, the court rejected the plaintiff's argument that the circuit's statement in Galloway, that "[i]rreparable injury often derives from the [intangible] nature of copyright violations," supported a rebuttable presumption of irreparable harm.²⁶⁵

258. Id. at 998 (likening the continued viability of the presumption to the catchphrase "Elvis has left the building," because the presumption was applied in Elvis Presley Enterprises, Inc. v. Passport Video, 349 F.3d 622, 627 (9th Cir. 2003)). In a humorous footnote, the court cites a long description of the result, including: "'the show's over, the curtain has fallen, the sun has set, that's all she wrote, the fat lady has sung'" and concludes that "[t]he same can be aptly said of the fate of the presumption of irreparable harm described in Elvis Presley." Id. at 998 n.5 (quoting Cecil Adams, "Elvis Has Left the Building." Who Said It First?, STRAIGHT DOPE (Dec. 27, 2002), <http://straightdope.com/columns/read/2430/elvis-has-left-the-building-who-said-it-first>).

259. 2011 WL 5084587, No. 11-1860, at *2 (4th Cir. Oct. 26, 2011) (per curiam) ("At one time . . . this circuit, presumed irreparable harm in copyright cases once the plaintiff established probable likelihood of success on the merits. . . . In 2006, the Supreme Court declared such presumptions inappropriate.").

260. Id. at *1.

261. Id.

262. Id. at *2.

263. Id.; see also supra note 146 and accompanying text.

264. Bethesda, 2011 WL 5084587, at *3 (citing Amoco Prod. Co. v. Vill. of Gambell, 480 U.S. 531, 544-46 & n.12 (1987) and Winter v. Natural Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 24 (2008), for the proposition that "the same equitable principles undergird courts' authority in each posture").

265. Id. (quoting Christopher Phelps & Assocs., LLC v. Galloway, 492 F.3d 532, 544 (4th Cir. 2007)) (explaining how such a reading of Galloway is "impermissibly broad" and would "lead to the very presumption that eBay prohibits"); cf. supra note 173 and accompanying text.

3. The Federal Circuit Abandons the Presumption for Patent Injunctions

While every circuit to address the issue concluded that eBay and Winter abrogated the presumption of irreparable harm as applied to copyright injunctions, uncertainty remained concerning the Federal Circuit's view of the presumption in the patent context in light of its prior evasiveness on the subject.²⁶⁶ Confusion remained among lower courts: at least one district court continued to doubt eBay's rejection of the presumption as applied to preliminary injunctions,²⁶⁷ while another noted that "the presumption of irreparable harm is at best on life support."²⁶⁸ The Federal Circuit removed all doubt in Robert Bosch LLC v. Pylon Manufacturing Corp., where it declared that "eBay jettisoned the presumption of irreparable harm as it applies to determining the appropriateness of injunctive relief."²⁶⁹ While the court specifically abolished the presumption as applied to patent infringement, the Federal Circuit's language was broad and unqualified, and stated agreement with the Second and Ninth circuits, which reached the same conclusion with respect to copyright law.²⁷⁰ Though it abandoned the presumption, the Federal Circuit noted that it would still utilize the patentee's right to exclude as a useful, though not dispositive, tool in aiding its determination of irreparable harm.²⁷¹

IV. THE FEDERAL CIRCUIT SHOULD REJECT THE PRESUMPTION IN FUTURE COPYRIGHT CASES

As discussed in Part III, the Jacobsen decision contrasted with that of every circuit to subsequently address the presumption's existence in a post-eBay world.²⁷² This included the Ninth Circuit, which overruled its own longstanding presumption of irreparable harm, precedent that the Federal Circuit had enforced in Jacobsen.²⁷³ As the Federal Circuit is not bound by the decisions of other circuits,²⁷⁴ Jacobsen technically remains good law. Yet its application of the presumption is likely moot, and the circuit split previously alluded to does not properly exist;²⁷⁵ if another copyright injunction case were to come before the Federal Circuit from a district court

266. See supra notes 153–57 and accompanying text.

267. See Powell v. Home Depot U.S.A., Inc., No. 07-80435-CIV, 2009 WL 3855174, at *13 (S.D. Fla. Nov. 17, 2009) ("[T]he presumption of irreparable harm in the context of preliminary injunctions should survive eBay.").

268. Red Bend Ltd. v. Google, Inc., No. 09-cv-11813, 2011 WL 1288503, at *18 (D. Mass. Mar. 31, 2011).

269. Robert Bosch LLC v. Pylon Mfg. Corp., 659 F.3d 1142, 1149 (Fed. Cir. 2011).

270. Id. at 1149; see also supra Part III.B.2.a–b.

271. See Robert Bosch, 659 F.3d at 1149–50 (citing eBay, Inc. v. MercExchange, L.L.C., 547 U.S. 388, 395 (2006) (Roberts, C.J., concurring); id. at 396–97 (Kennedy, J., concurring)).

272. See supra Part III.B.2.

273. See supra notes 203, 248, 257 and accompanying text.

274. See Amerikohl Mining, Inc. v. United States, 899 F.2d 1210, 1214 (Fed. Cir. 1990) ("[D]ecisions from other circuits are not binding on this court"); see also 21 C.J.S. Courts § 210 (2006) ("[O]ne circuit is not bound by a decision of another").

275. See supra note 239 and accompanying text.

in the Ninth Circuit, it would likely apply current Ninth Circuit law, require proof of each of the four eBay factors, and reject any presumption of irreparable harm. It is less clear, however, how the Federal Circuit would apply regional circuit law where the regional circuit has not addressed eBay's effect on the copyright presumption.

This part first contends that although it may have been reasonable at the time to do so, the Federal Circuit erroneously declined to apply eBay to copyright preliminary injunctions in Jacobsen. It then urges the Federal Circuit to reject the presumption in future copyright cases when the regional circuit has not addressed the vitality of the presumption post-eBay. Finally, it proposes that such a ruling rejecting the presumption is ideal because it aligns with current case law and advances important policy goals.

A. The Jacobsen Court's Error in Presuming Irreparable Harm After eBay

This section begins by addressing why it was justifiable at the time for the Jacobsen court to apply the presumption of irreparable harm. First, uncertainty reasonably existed as to the Ninth Circuit's treatment of the presumption post-eBay, and second, eBay case law revealed conflicting interpretations of eBay's application to copyright preliminary injunctions. Despite such apparent justifications, this section asserts that the Federal Circuit's application of the Ninth Circuit's pre-eBay standard in Jacobsen was erroneous, as eBay's logic implicitly rejected the practice of presuming irreparable harm upon a showing of probable success on the merits of a copyright infringement claim. Had it applied eBay's standards to the preliminary injunction at hand, the Jacobsen court could have avoided the application of a legal standard that would subsequently be overruled.

1. Rationales for the Jacobsen Court's Failure to Apply eBay

The Federal Circuit was potentially justified in declining to apply the eBay four-factor test to the copyright preliminary injunction motion at hand in Jacobsen. First, Ninth Circuit law was unclear concerning eBay's effect on the presumption of irreparable harm as applied to copyright preliminary injunctions. Second, the few district courts that addressed eBay's relevance to copyright preliminary injunctions reached conflicting conclusions, providing the Federal Circuit with little persuasive authority to guide it. For these reasons, it was not unreasonable for the Federal Circuit to predict that the Ninth Circuit would not apply eBay to preliminary injunctions.

Nothing in the Federal Circuit's enabling legislation (FCIA) restricts or, conversely, requires the Federal Circuit to apply its own law to non-patent matters.²⁷⁶ The Jacobsen court, however, was bound by Federal Circuit precedent requiring application of regional circuit law to non-patent issues, precedent that originated from the policy goals of preventing inter-circuit conflicts²⁷⁷ and avoiding self-appropriation of law not assigned to it.²⁷⁸

276. See supra note 59 and accompanying text.

277. See supra notes 55–56 and accompanying text.

278. See supra note 53 and accompanying text.

While the Federal Circuit has expanded the realm of its own law in the past, this expansion has only been in the patent realm.²⁷⁹ Even if the Federal Circuit had ordered a rehearing en banc,²⁸⁰ to apply its own law to a field over which it has no subject matter jurisdiction over—the grant of a preliminary injunction for copyright infringement—would be taking Federal Circuit choice of law too far, as it would contradict congressional intent to discourage Federal Circuit appropriation of law not specifically assigned to it.²⁸¹

Although required to apply Ninth Circuit law, this was unsettled at the time of Jacobsen, as the Ninth Circuit had yet to address eBay's effect on its practice of presuming irreparable harm as applied to copyright preliminary injunctions.²⁸² In such situations, Federal Circuit choice-of-law precedent requires the court to “reasonably predict how [the regional circuit] would decide the issue.”²⁸³ It was reasonable for the Jacobsen court to express uncertainty as to eBay's effect on the presumption, and therefore predict that the Ninth Circuit would not apply eBay in the copyright preliminary injunction context. At the time of Jacobsen, the Ninth Circuit had already addressed its standard for granting copyright preliminary injunctions in one post-eBay case, Perfect 10 II.²⁸⁴ There, the Ninth Circuit applied its traditional two-part test, rather than eBay's principles, to a copyright preliminary injunction in a decision that did not address eBay.²⁸⁵ While Perfect 10 II did not address the presumption of irreparable harm,²⁸⁶ it was reasonable for the Federal Circuit to believe that the Ninth Circuit considered eBay inapplicable to copyright preliminary injunctions, due to the Perfect 10 II court's failure to apply eBay's traditional equitable principles to such an analysis. If the eBay decision did not apply, then the Ninth Circuit's presumption standard remained intact.

Moreover, relevant eBay case law had reached inconsistent and sometimes opposite conclusions regarding the status of the presumption. Support for eBay's abrogation of the presumption in the copyright preliminary injunction context arose mainly from the Grokster court, which noted that eBay had twice referenced Amoco, a case concerning a preliminary injunction.²⁸⁷ No circuits had addressed eBay's effect on the presumption,²⁸⁸ and the only circuits that addressed eBay in the copyright context applied eBay's factors to permanent injunctions.²⁸⁹ Little agreement existed among district courts regarding eBay's appropriate

279. See supra notes 65–74 and accompanying text.

280. See supra note 64 and accompanying text.

281. See supra notes 46, 60 and accompanying text.

282. See supra note 201 and accompanying text.

283. TechSearch, L.L.C. v. Intel Corp., 286 F.3d 1360, 1378 (Fed. Cir. 2002); accord Panduit Corp. v. All States Plastic Mfg. Co., 744 F.2d 1564, 1575–76 (Fed. Cir. 1984) (per curiam).

284. See supra note 200 and accompanying text.

285. See supra note 200 and accompanying text.

286. See supra note 201 and accompanying text.

287. See supra notes 182–86 and accompanying text.

288. See supra note 173 and accompanying text.

289. See supra Part II.C.1.

extension to copyright law,²⁹⁰ even within the same district,²⁹¹ with many concluding that eBay did not nullify the presumption as applied to preliminary injunctive relief.²⁹² Therefore, the Jacobsen court could not clearly assess whether eBay had, in fact, eliminated the presumption from the injunction analysis, or if its principles indeed extended to copyright preliminary injunctive relief.

2. Why the Jacobsen Court Ultimately Erred in Presuming Harm After eBay

Although there were reasonable procedural grounds for the Jacobsen court's failure to apply eBay to the copyright preliminary injunction at hand, eBay's logic directly opposed the presumption of irreparable harm as applied to copyright injunctions. The Jacobsen court therefore erred in employing the Ninth Circuit's pre-eBay presumption, as eBay not only abrogated the presumption in patent cases, but extended to the copyright preliminary injunction context as well. Despite a mandatory adherence to Ninth Circuit law, the Jacobsen court could have circumvented procedural hurdles by construing unsettled Ninth Circuit law as rejecting the presumption in light of eBay.

Although district courts were not unanimous on the issue at the time Jacobsen was decided,²⁹³ the eBay decision clearly rejected presuming irreparable harm in the patent context. When determining the grant of injunctive relief, eBay required courts to apply traditional equitable principles, one of which involves proof of irreparable harm.²⁹⁴ While many courts had placed the burden on defendants to rebut the presumption, eBay shifted the burden from defendants back to plaintiffs in holding that plaintiffs "must demonstrate" the irreparable harm prong of the test.²⁹⁵ It is thus inappropriate for courts to presume irreparable harm following eBay.²⁹⁶ Several district courts indeed came to this exact conclusion.²⁹⁷ eBay's implicit rejection of the presumption is made clearer when one considers the Supreme Court's language in Amoco that the "presumption is contrary to traditional equitable principles."²⁹⁸ As eBay specifically held that traditional equitable principles apply equally to patent disputes,²⁹⁹ it is evident that eBay abrogated the presumption of irreparable harm with respect to patent law.

eBay's logic also extended beyond patent law and permanent injunctions to the realm of copyright law and preliminary injunctions. The eBay Court

290. See supra notes 174–77 and accompanying text.

291. See supra note 178 and accompanying text.

292. See supra notes 174–77 and accompanying text.

293. See supra Part II.B.

294. See supra text accompanying note 140.

295. See supra text accompanying note 140.

296. See supra text accompanying note 140.

297. See supra notes 158–61 and accompanying text.

298. Amoco Prod. Co. v. Vill. of Gambell, 480 U.S. 531, 545 (1987).

299. See supra notes 133, 141–42, 147 and accompanying text.

spent a significant portion of its decision comparing patent to copyright law.³⁰⁰ It noted that both areas of law grant holders a fundamental right to exclude for a limited time, and that both permit courts to grant injunctions according to traditional equitable principles as they deem reasonable.³⁰¹ The eBay Court also pointed to prior copyright decisions to demonstrate consistent rejection of the rule that an injunction automatically follows a finding of infringement.³⁰² Further, in emphasizing that courts should exercise discretion consistent with traditional equitable principles “in patent disputes no less than in other cases governed by such standards,”³⁰³ the Court clearly refused to limit its ruling to patent law, and extended it to any dispute governed by traditional equitable principles—of which copyright aptly applies.³⁰⁴ Notably, the only three circuits to have squarely addressed eBay’s application to copyright at the time of the Jacobsen decision—the First, Fourth, and Eleventh Circuits—had already adopted the position that the eBay factors applied in the copyright context, albeit to permanent injunctive relief.³⁰⁵

Given the fact that the eBay Court cited Amoco, a preliminary injunction case where the Court stated that permanent and preliminary injunction standards were basically identical,³⁰⁶ as support for its four-factor test,³⁰⁷ eBay was clearly applicable to preliminary injunctive relief as well.³⁰⁸ Ninth Circuit law holds that when prior circuit authority is irreconcilable with intervening higher authority, the circuit is bound by the higher authority.³⁰⁹ Thus, the Jacobsen court should have construed eBay as abolishing the Ninth Circuit’s presumption standard, and reasonably predicted that the Ninth Circuit would overrule the copyright presumption once it addressed eBay’s effect on the standard—as the Ninth Circuit in fact later did.³¹⁰ For all of these reasons, in conjunction with the fact that a Ninth Circuit district court had recently advocated eBay’s application to preliminary injunctions in Grokster,³¹¹ Jacobsen’s failure to apply eBay was erroneous, and the court could have ultimately avoided the adoption of a legal standard that was subsequently overruled.

300. See supra notes 144–46 and accompanying text.

301. See supra notes 144–45 and accompanying text.

302. See supra note 146 and accompanying text.

303. eBay, Inc. v. MercExchange, L.L.C., 547 U.S. 388, 394 (2006).

304. See supra note 145 (comparing patent and copyright law’s similar standards for granting injunctive relief); accord supra note 230 and accompanying text (citing the Second Circuit’s similar reasoning in Salinger).

305. See supra Part II.C.1.

306. See supra note 80 and accompanying text.

307. See supra notes 139–40 and accompanying text.

308. Cf. supra notes 232, 247, 253 and accompanying text (noting the similar reasoning of the Second and Ninth Circuits).

309. See supra note 240 and accompanying text; see also supra note 26 and accompanying text.

310. See supra Part III.B.2(b).

311. See supra notes 62, 179–86 and accompanying text (explaining how unsettled regional circuit law should be discerned in light of district court decisions in that circuit).

B. The Federal Circuit Should Construe Unsettled Regional Law as Applying eBay to Copyright Preliminary Injunctions

While eBay's effect on the presumption of irreparable harm, and its application to copyright preliminary injunctions in particular, was ambiguous among the lower courts when the Federal Circuit decided Jacobsen, the passage of time has provided much needed clarity. It is possible that a case involving the grant of a preliminary injunction for copyright infringement may once again find its way to the Federal Circuit, in conjunction with a patent claim.³¹² If this appeal is from a district court where the circuit presumed irreparable harm before eBay, but has not yet addressed whether eBay has eliminated this presumption,³¹³ the Federal Circuit should not mechanically apply outdated pre-eBay precedent in the name of strict adherence to regional law. Rather, in discerning regional circuit law where it is unclear, the Federal Circuit should predict that these circuits would hold that eBay abrogated the presumption. This section assesses how such a ruling would align with recent case law and advance important policy goals.

1. Harmonizing with Recent Case Law

As the Federal Circuit must apply regional circuit law in addressing the presumption's post-eBay vitality,³¹⁴ it may reasonably predict that these circuits will eliminate the presumption upon addressing the issue. This is because the uncertainty among courts regarding eBay's application to copyright preliminary injunctions, although present when Jacobsen was decided,³¹⁵ has ceased to exist.

In Winter, the Supreme Court eliminated much of this uncertainty by confirming that eBay applied to preliminary injunctions. First, the Court applied the same traditional equitable principles set forth in eBay to preliminary injunctions: it reaffirmed the traditional equitable principles as applicable to preliminary injunctions, holding that courts must determine a likelihood of irreparable harm, balance the competing parties' claims of injury, and consider the public interest when granting a preliminary

312. See supra notes 36–48 and accompanying text.

313. These circuits include the First, Third, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Tenth, and Eleventh Circuits. The Second, Ninth, and Fourth Circuits have explicitly rejected the presumption as it applies to copyright preliminary injunctions. See supra Part III.B.2. The Fifth Circuit expressly rejected the presumption before eBay, and the D.C. Circuit has never expressly adopted it. See supra note 107. While the First and Eleventh Circuits have applied eBay to permanent injunctive relief, see supra Part II.C.1, these circuits have yet to specifically address eBay's effect on the presumption of harm for preliminary injunctions, see supra note 173 and accompanying text.

314. As discussed in Part IV.B.2, infra, precedent requires application of regional circuit law to copyright claims, and overruling such precedent en banc would cut against congressional intent by causing Federal Circuit appropriation of law not exclusively assigned to it. If the Federal Circuit could apply its own law to copyright matters, it would most likely reject the presumption, as it recently confirmed that “eBay jettisoned the presumption of irreparable harm as it applies . . . to injunctive relief.” Robert Bosch LLC v. Pylon Mfg. Corp., 659 F.3d 1142, 1149 (Fed. Cir. 2011).

315. See supra Part IV.A.2.

injunction.³¹⁶ Second, the Court emphasized that preliminary injunctive relief is an “extraordinary remedy never awarded as of right.”³¹⁷ This analysis mirrored eBay’s rejection of categorical rules permitting injunctions to automatically follow findings of infringement.³¹⁸ Finally, the Court more overtly disapproved of the presumption of irreparable harm in the preliminary injunction context by clearly placing the burden of proof on the plaintiff to show that “irreparable injury is likely.”³¹⁹ If issuance of a preliminary injunction based on a possibility of irreparable harm was too lenient for the Supreme Court,³²⁰ then it logically follows that issuing an injunction upon a presumption of irreparable harm is even less consistent with the extraordinary nature of such relief.³²¹

Additionally, all circuits that have spoken on the vitality of the copyright presumption of irreparable harm in a post-eBay world have emphatically rejected it in the context of preliminary injunctions.³²² The Second and Ninth Circuits have specifically held that eBay and Winter abrogated this presumption, and effectively overruled their precedents.³²³ The Fourth Circuit also found the presumption inappropriate in light of eBay.³²⁴ The Second and Ninth Circuits’ abandonment of the presumption is particularly significant, due to the prominence of these circuits in promulgating copyright doctrine.³²⁵ In predicting that circuits that have not yet addressed the presumption’s post-eBay vitality would reject the presumption as inconsistent with eBay and Winter, the Federal Circuit would not only harmonize with all circuits that have addressed the issue, but would be in accord with the most important circuits in the field.

2. Advancing Public Policy

For purposes of discerning regional law, the Federal Circuit has stated that if the regional circuit has not directly addressed an issue, it must predict the applicable regional law in light of public policy considerations.³²⁶ Several policies would be advanced if the Federal Circuit interpreted unsettled circuit law to reject the presumption of irreparable harm in copyright preliminary injunction cases after eBay and Winter. These include the efficient utilization of court resources, the avoidance of

316. See supra text accompanying note 214. The factor of likelihood of success on the merits is not pertinent to a determination of permanent injunctive relief because at that point, the plaintiff has already established success. See supra note 80 and accompanying text.

317. Winter v. Natural Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 24 (2008).

318. See supra note 146 and accompanying text.

319. Winter, 555 U.S. at 22; see also supra text accompanying notes 210–12.

320. See supra text accompanying notes 211–12.

321. The Ninth Circuit notably reiterated this argument in Flexible Lifeline. See supra note 254 and accompanying text.

322. See supra Part III.B.2.

323. See supra notes 235, 240, 256 and accompanying text.

324. See supra note 262 and accompanying text.

325. See supra notes 105–06 and accompanying text.

326. Panduit Corp. v. All States Plastic Mfg. Co., 744 F.2d 1564, 1575–76 (Fed. Cir. 1984); see also supra note 62 and accompanying text.

intercircuit conflict, and preservation of the extraordinary nature of the preliminary injunction.

First, such application promotes an efficient use of court resources. Intervening Supreme Court law, which is controlling precedent, binds the circuits that have yet to address whether the presumption survives eBay.³²⁷ As it is now clear that eBay and Winter are inconsistent with the presumption of irreparable harm in the copyright context,³²⁸ the Federal Circuit should presume that unsettled circuits would reject the presumption once they are in a position to address the issue. Otherwise, the Federal Circuit would inefficiently utilize court resources by failing to apply intervening and controlling Supreme Court precedent that the regional circuit would be required to enforce subsequently.³²⁹

Interpreting regional circuit law in this way also implements the Federal Circuit's choice-of-law policy to avoid intercircuit conflicts in non-patent areas.³³⁰ If the Federal Circuit were to apply, for example, the Third or Sixth Circuit's pre-eBay presumption of irreparable harm upon a showing of prima facie copyright infringement, it would conflict with all circuits—the Second, Ninth, and Fourth—that have ruled on the issue post-eBay.³³¹ Such a ruling would not aggravate existing intercircuit conflict on the issue, but instead would create a wholly new intercircuit conflict where application of outdated regional law is reaffirmed in sharp contrast with the current law of other circuits. While Congress never required the Federal Circuit to clear up intercircuit conflict,³³² it likely never intended that the circuit create such conflict either. Additionally, in applying at least Eighth and Tenth Circuit law, ruling that the copyright presumption is inconsistent with eBay and Winter would also advance circuit policy that a sister circuit's decision deserves to be given great weight and precedential value.³³³

Finally, aside from implementing congressional intent, perhaps the most important policy reason for abolishing the presumption as applied to copyright preliminary injunctions follows from the nature of the record at the preliminary injunction stage. Preliminary injunctive relief has historically been viewed as an extraordinary remedy that courts should never award automatically,³³⁴ and one which wields incredible power, as it often results in the end of litigation.³³⁵ Presuming irreparable harm, the

327. See supra note 26 and accompanying text.

328. See supra Part IV.A.1.

329. See United States v. Nachtigal, 507 U.S. 1, 5 (1993) (“We hold that the Court of Appeals was wrong in refusing to recognize that this case was controlled by our opinion . . . rather than by its previous opinion . . .”).

330. See supra notes 55–56 and accompanying text.

331. See supra note 322 and accompanying text.

332. See supra note 59 and accompanying text.

333. See 21 C.J.S. Courts § 210. The Eighth and Tenth Circuits adhere to this policy. See, e.g., Wedelstedt v. Wiley, 477 F.3d 1160, 1165 (10th Cir. 2007); In re Miller, 276 F.3d 424, 428–29 (8th Cir. 2002).

334. See supra notes 87–88 and accompanying text.

335. See supra note 89 and accompanying text.

most important factor of the injunction analysis,³³⁶ upon a mere showing of probable success of infringement thus runs counter to the nature of the preliminary injunction, and can lead to the over-issuance of a remedy that should not be granted unless the plaintiff, “by a clear showing, carries the burden of persuasion.”³³⁷ Additionally, as the factual record is often incomplete at this stage in the proceedings, the court may issue erroneous findings regarding a plaintiff’s likelihood of success on the merits.³³⁸ Presuming irreparable harm in such cases could lead to the erroneous grant of preliminary injunctions, opposing the “familiar law that injunctions will not issue to enforce a right that is doubtful.”³³⁹ Therefore, there is danger in presuming that the plaintiff will suffer irreparable harm upon a finding that the plaintiff will likely succeed on its infringement claim when this finding is made on an incomplete record without the benefit of a full trial to ascertain the merits of the plaintiff’s claim. Requiring the plaintiff to prove irreparable harm is merely another safeguard against the erroneous grant of such an important, and indeed extraordinary, remedy.

CONCLUSION

The eBay v. MercExchange decision is clearly inconsistent with the formerly common judicial practice of presuming irreparable harm once a plaintiff proves a likelihood of success on the merits of its copyright infringement claim. The Federal Circuit in Jacobsen v. Katzer therefore erred in enforcing the Ninth Circuit’s pre-eBay presumption of irreparable harm upon a showing of prima facie infringement, and in failing to hold that eBay abrogated this presumption in the copyright preliminary injunction context. While Jacobsen’s failure to apply eBay at the time was justifiable in light of difficulty perceiving Ninth Circuit law concerning eBay’s effect on the presumption, as well as inconsistent eBay case law that revealed conflicting interpretations as to eBay’s application, such justifications are no longer valid. The last four years have confirmed the death of the presumption of irreparable harm as applied to copyright preliminary injunctions. This progression away from the presumption began with the Supreme Court’s application of eBay’s principles to preliminary injunctions in Winter, continued with circuits’ consistent rulings that eBay indeed abolished the presumption, and was reinforced by the Federal Circuit’s own explicit abandonment of the presumption in the patent context.

Therefore, it is evident that if the Federal Circuit is again faced with a copyright preliminary injunction motion from a circuit that has not addressed the continuing vitality of the presumption post-eBay, the Federal Circuit should not mechanically apply the regional circuit’s pre-eBay

336. See supra notes 82–83 and accompanying text.

337. Mazurek v. Armstrong, 520 U.S. 968, 972 (1997); see also supra note 88 and accompanying text.

338. See supra notes 90–91 and accompanying text.

339. Consol. Canal Co. v. Mesa Canal Co., 117 U.S. 296, 301 (1900); see also supra note 88 and accompanying text.

practice of presuming irreparable harm upon a finding of prima facie infringement. Rather, the court should construe such unsettled law by predicting that the circuit would abandon the presumption as inconsistent with eBay and Winter. This ruling will harmonize with the law of all circuits that have spoken on the issue—including the leading copyright circuits—and will advance the important public policies of efficiently utilizing court resources and avoiding intercircuit conflict. Perhaps most significantly, in holding that the presumption as applied to copyright preliminary injunctions does not survive eBay, the Federal Circuit will aid in safeguarding the extraordinary nature of this remedy from excessive grants by requiring adherence to the traditional equitable principles that courts have espoused since injunctions' origins in equity.