Founded in 1905, the Fordham Law School maintains a rich history in legal study. The administration and faculty keep this tradition alive by continuously updating and preparing the curriculum to meet the changing needs of the study of law and the student body. This dedication shows in the diverse course and clinical offerings taught in both the day and evening. While studying for exams and writing legal briefs, it is hard to appreciate the level of expertise of the faculty. However, students of the law school realize that the school’s emphasis on the practical application of the law better prepares them for the challenges they face every day than their counterparts from other schools. Students also realize that the school’s focus on serving others and the community is unique. Often alums of the school “give back” by joining the full-time or adjunct faculty. This assures the ninety-year plus institution will continue its tradition of legal study into the twenty-first century.

MASTERS OF LAWS

The graduating Master of Laws class of 1999 demonstrated how global Fordham Law School has become. Its members represent all corners of the world, all of them attracted to the unique resources and expertise offered by Fordham in the areas of Banking, Corporate and Finance Law and International Business and Trade Law.

With the growing interdependence of the United States and its trade partners and the convergence of banking, corporate, insurance and other financial sectors, these two courses of study prepare students for careers in vital and expanding areas of law today. The Fordham Center on European Union Law and International Antitrust offers unrivaled university teaching and research. Each year, the Center sponsors courses and seminars that are unique in the United States because of the intense participation of the European Community officials and judges.

The graduate program is led by two directors. Professor Carl Felsenfeld is the Director of External Affairs and Professor Joel R. Reidenberg is Director of Academic Affairs.

DOCTOR OF LAW

For many members of the Class of 1999, it is hard to believe that three (or four) years of hard work are finally over. For some the memory of Fordham Law will not fade fast enough as student loans are repaid in monthly installments. For others the reality of legal practice will make the study of law seem like a long lost luxury. Thankfully all can look back at their time at Fordham Law as a significant accomplishment in their lives.

The study of law has changed significantly since past generations graced the halls of Fordham Law. Areas of practice continue to become more specialized and more complex. A review of the course curriculum reveals the impact of the information age with titles such as Computer Law and Information Technology Law & Global Networks.

A majority of the members of the Class of 1999 will enter private practice in the Northeast. However, many will pursue careers in public interest and government in positions ranging from clerkships to prosecution. No matter the field of study chosen, Fordham alumni will be well prepared to take on the next challenge in their lives.

Unable to hold back their excitement, Silvia Duarte, Jennifer Painter and fellow classmate congratulate each other on graduation day.
